Lakas plans 7 revisions to Charter

By Cynthia D. Balana and Christine O. Avendaño

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO'S PARTY will propose seven amendments to the Constitution in its bid to move the country to the parliamentary system in six months, working documents made available yesterday to the INQUIRER showed.

"It will be tight but doable," said the President's political adviser, Gabriel Claudio, of the timeline proposed during Saturday's caucus of the ruling Lakas-Christian Muslim Democrats.

"I see no reason why the party will not rally behind that timeline," said Claudio in a phone interview.

The amendments, proposed by Speaker Jose de Venecia, are:

- Transformation from the presidential to the parliamentary system.
- Establishment of a unicameral legislature and abolition of the Senate.
- Lifting the term limits of elected officials.
- Providing for a five-year term of office for all elective officials.
- A ban on political "turncoatism."
- Creation of autonomous regions toward the establishment of a federal system.
- Easing of restrictions on foreign investments in the country.

The working documents included a paper titled "Option A with Timeline." It included the approval of the proposed seven amendments either by a constituent assembly or a

Senators to GMA: Don't dictate to us

Joker: Senate won't write own obituary

By TJ Burgonio and Michael Lim Ubac

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO's fresh push for a new Constitution and a parliamentary system by the middle of the year has run into a wall of opposition in the Senate.

Maverick administration Sen. Joker Arroyo and his colleagues yesterday scoffed at the President's timetable, reminding her that she and other Lakas party leaders could not dictate to the Senate.

"The Con-cha troika can't rush the Senate on that," the senator said of Ms Arroyo, former President Fidel V. Ramos and Speaker Jose de Venecia. "The troika mistakenly believes that the senators would agree to write their own obituary."

The Senate will be abolished under the unicameral form of government espoused by Lakas.

At the Lakas national directorate meeting on Saturday, Ms Arroyo said Charter change "must be achieved by the middle of this year."

The Lakas national directorate rejected Ramos' proposal that Ms Arroyo cut short her term in 2007 to pave the way for a parliamentary government.

De Venecia is proposing a French-style transition parliamentary government under which Ms Arroyo would remain president but share some of her powers with a prime minister who would be the chief operating officer.

Sen. Richard Gordon, chair of the committee on constitutional amendments, revision of codes and laws, said the Senate was not a rubber stamp.

Reacting to Ms Arroyo's timeline for constitutional change, Gordon said: "I will always vote for the interest of the country, not for the interests of President Arroyo, De Venecia and Ramos."

Deputy Speaker for Mindanao Gerry Salapuddin acknowledged that the battle to amend the Constitution would shift to the Senate.

After emerging from the Lakas national directorate meeting that ended at midnight, Salapuddin disclosed that the party led by its chair, Ms Arroyo, would "negotiate" with senators starting next week.

"Not one of the (administration) senators

FVR now says he's flexible on GMA term limit

By Nikko Dizon

FORMER PRESIDENT FIDEL RAMOS, USING his trademark cryptic replies, does not sound like he has lost a battle against President Macapagal-Arroyo.

"You have to be flexible," said Ramos, a day after a caucus of the ruling Lakas-CMD agreed to move the country toward a parliamentary democracy.

"Today, I cannot be carrying bombs to be thrown in your direction. Why? I'm boarding an airplane. We won't be able to get past security," said Ramos, looking relaxed at a news conference before boarding a flight for a weeklong business meeting in India.

The 77-year-old Ramos was rebuffed twice by Ms Arroyo in his call for her to relinquish power and run in elections in 2007 upon the institution of a parliamentary system of government.

During the Lakas-CMD caucus on Saturday night, the ruling party approved a resolution "firmly in support of the fulfillment by the President of her present constitutional mandate to serve in office until 2010."

HIDDEN, GROWING PROBLEM

Persons with AIDS get priestly comfort

By Christian V. Esguerra

THE PALE, ALMOST GHOSTLY FIGURE, lying in a coma at the far end of Pavilion IV of the San Lazaro Hospital in Manila is expecting death any day now.

Nita, 27, is in the final stage of her long and losing battle with AIDS. It was the homecoming gift she got from the father of her two daughters, a longtime seaman who died of the virus three years ago.

The younger of the two is just 5 years old. The girl is infected as well. She's now taking medication, but doctors say it's just a matter of time before the virus claims her, too.

Her elder sister, 6, will soon be a total orphan.

Theirs is the new and often obscured picture of the country's "hidden and growing" problem with the AIDS virus.

At least 2,260 cases were documented last year, but the figures don't actually give the real score. Many "persons with AIDS" still live in the dark, fearing discrimination.

Dr. Roderick Poblete of the Philippine National AIDS Council once said a conservative estimate would be around 10,000, considering that officials might be missing two to three more victims for every documented case.

As far as the council knows, at least 749 of the AIDS victims got the virus while working abroad. Seafarers like Nita's live-in partner top the category. They far outnumber entertainers, at least 268 to 50, as of last year.

Nita, who hails from a family of farmers in Central Luzon, knew nothing about the statistics or the extent of the AIDS problem in the Philippines.

When her partner, then in his 40s, returned home three years ago, all she saw was a healthy-looking man coming home from another hard stint abroad.

They slept together and, soon, she was pregnant with their second child. But little did she know it was a betrayal. He had gone on sexual adventures abroad and came home with AIDS.

"She kept dreaming about him a few weeks ago, probably because of her deep-seated anger at the man," says Fr. Genaro "Gennie" Diwa, who has been a father figure

Lakas mounting divisive campaign for Cha-cha

By Amando Doronila

THE RESULTS OF THE WEEKEND caucus of the ruling Lakas-Christian Muslim Democrats left the political horizon more muddled than it was before the party members met.

The caucus miserably did not live up to the billing that it would resolve the issue of President Macapagal-Arroyo's tenure and has left the public guessing who won or lost in what was touted as a showdown between Ms Arroyo and former President Fidel Ramos over the proposal to cancel the 2007 elections and allow the President to serve out her term until 2010.

Published reports indicate that the coalition is flexing its muscle to ram through the no-election proposal, in the fashion that its majority in the House of Representatives strangled in September 2005 the impeachment complaint against the President.

ANALYSIS

The no-election scheme clearly contradicts Ramos' preferred plan—for the President to step down in 2007 and for the installation of a parliamentary system after across-the-board general elections.

The caucus apparently swept these differences under the rug and deflected a damaging consequence out her term until 2010.

Solons see further delay in approval of '06 budget

By TJ Burgonio

SENATORS ARE APPREHENSIVE THE PASSAGE of the P1.06-trillion national budget would be further delayed because the House of Representatives appears to be more engrossed with the move to amend the Constitution.

"It looks like it's going to be further delayed. They're more interested in Cha-cha (Charter change) than in passing the budget," said Sen. Ralph Recto, chair of the committee on ways and means, in an interview.

As Congress resumes sessions today, the House is expected to give priority to President Macapagal-Arroyo's push for a new Constitution by the middle of the year than any piece of legislation.

Cagayan de Oro Rep. Constantino Jaraula said on Saturday he had drafted a Charter that would allow Ms Arroyo to delegate her powers to a prime minister during the transition from a presidential to a parliamentary form of government.

The budget measure, which by law has to emanate from the lower chamber, remains stuck in the House committee on appropriations which failed to hold hearings due to lack of a quorum.

Recto warned the lawmakers that by opting to tackle Charter change before the budget, they would be earning the anger of the people who will be further burdened with the implementation of the 12-percent expanded value-added tax (VAT) next month.

"They will only gain the ire of the people," said Recto. "After asking them to pay more taxes, we are not going to give them anything in return by passing the budget. They're being short-changed and given the raw end of the deal."

The senator urged the congressmen to speed up the deliberations on the budget and hasten its transmittal to the upper chamber for approval.

Apart from being the most important piece of legislation, the budget measure would address the Filipinos' basic concerns such as health, education, food, shelter, law and order, among other things, Recto said.

RECTO

"Can Cha-cha address all these concerns? Besides, you can't convince them [the people] to support it if you don't pass the budget first. We must give them a reason to support Cha-cha," he said.

Tomorrow, the Senate committee of the whole resumes its hearings on the national budget, specifically that for the Development Academy of the Philippines, Philippine Sports Commission, National Anti-Poverty Commission, Philippine Tourism Authority and Duty Free Philippines, among other agencies.

"We will be ferreting out excessive spending by seeking justification for expenses done by the government," Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. said in an interview.

Seeing a delay in the transmittal of the budget measure by the House, the Senate convened itself into a committee of the whole in mid-November to scrutinize the budgets of every government department and agency.

Senate President Franklin Drilon last month voiced optimism that the budget, the biggest ever submitted by a President to Congress for approval, would be passed by the end of the first quarter this year.

The senator said he expected the House to conclude its hearings, finish its debates and approve the General Appropriations Act on the floor, and transmit it to the Senate by the middle of February.

Reyes orders tighter security in Abra after latest killing

By Artha Kira Paredes
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

LA PAZ, ABRA—INTERIOR SECRETARY Angelo Reyes yesterday ordered police officials in Abra to tighten security and contain further violence following the murder of Mayor Marc Ysrael Bernos of this town on Friday.

Reyes, who paid his respects at Bernos' wake here yesterday, said the peace covenant signed by warring Abra officials on Aug. 29, 2005, had largely held until the murder of Bernos, a local opposition leader.

Bernos, 31, was shot dead while watching a basketball game at the Sangguniang Kabataan park here at about 7 Friday night.

Reyes said he ordered Senior Supt. Marcelo Manalo, Abra police director, to increase police presence and visibility in the province and set up check points.

"The Philippine National Police's Special Action Forces will continue its presence [in the province]," Reyes said.

He said if Bernos' murder signaled the start of fresh hostilities among warring politicians in the province, the police were ready to prevent further bloodshed.

"I hope this would end," Reyes said.

Reyes swore in the slain mayor's younger brother, Vice Mayor Joseph Santo Niño Bernos, 27, as the new mayor on Sunday.

The younger Bernos took his oath of office beside the coffin of his brother.

"Never in my wildest dreams did I imagine that I would take my oath in front of my brother's coffin," said Joseph.

Bernos' father, former Abra Gov. Andres Bernos, said the family believed the mayor's murder was politically motivated.

Reyes said he had ordered the police Criminal Investigation and Detection Group in the Cordillera to quickly solve the case.

"They will not go home until the case is solved," he said, adding that the CIDG was also ordered to furnish the Department of Interior and Local Government with daily reports on the progress of the investigation.

Reyes said there would be no "sacred cows" in the implementation of the law. "We will be firm but fair."

Supt. Leonardo Dionisio, Cordillera police director, echoed the vow, and said: "We would exclude no one. Even powerful and influential people would be included in the investigation."

Dionisio said an eyewitness had provided a description of the gunman. He said the police were following through on leads regarding the identity of the people behind the murder, but declined to elaborate.

The mayor's wife, Joy, said, "Every Abrenian knows who killed my husband." She also declined to name any suspect.

Joseph said it was sad that his brother was killed while serving his last term as mayor of La Paz.

When asked if he thought the death of his brother might have been provoked by his open declaration to pursue higher office, Joseph said: "That's how it goes. If you fly early, you would be taken down early."

frontation between Ms Arroyo and Ramos. The founding father of Lakas-

CMD, Ramos was ominously quiet and did not contradict the claims by some party faithful of "unanimity" in the motion not to tamper with the President's term.

Ms Arroyo emerged from the caucus in a triumphant and belligerent mood, which did not seem justified by the outcome of the caucus. According to press reports, the caucus "unanimously" passed a motion not to touch her term.

Claims like these strengthen public perception that Lakas and party leaders are fixing things among themselves on such issues as constitutional revision.

From the President's mouth came these Delphic words: "We must achieve (constitutional change) by the middle of this year." She did not clarify what she meant, what sort of change she had in mind, and whether the election would be cancelled.

Speaker Jose de Venecia added to this obfuscation with the pompous statement that "we are on the eve of a historic six months. We will see a historic transition of the Philippines under the leadership of Lakas from a presidential form of government to a unicameral form of government."

No role for the people

If Lakas is engineering a "historic transformation" of the political system, it is doing it to the exclusion of public participation, as though constitutional change is the exclusive concern of a majority coalition.

The method by which Lakas seeks to make this transformation becomes more unsettling after Ms Arroyo urged her party mates to use "superior force" to realize Lakas' three priorities, revising the Constitution, sustaining gains in the economy, and easing poverty.

She urged the party to have "teamwork and discipline" in a fighting statement apparently to rouse the spirit of party members to battle in an expected revival of political hostilities over the contentious issues of constitutional change and threats from the opposition to file a new impeachment complaint.

Ramming Cha-cha through

"Steeled by bruising battles, we don't need additional training to win over our political foes in every round," Ms Arroyo said.

"We are the superior force. Our opponents must either toe the line of the national interest and fiscalize responsibly with statesmanship, or be relegated to the wayside of irrelevance or ignominy. With our heavy armory of democracy and legitimacy, we shall fight the squads of destabilizers and spoilers in the opposition."

The words "superior force" signal that the administration would not hesitate to use the Lakas machinery to ram through proposals to convene the House and the Senate into a constituent assembly to propose constitutional amendments, and to consider the draft constitution prepared by the Consultative Commission, which has proposed the cancellation of the 2007 election.

Flaw in the strategy

Both the constituent assembly proposition and the no-election scheme are highly contentious, and the first is fiercely opposed by the Senate.

This campaign for constitutional change rests on the House—where Lakas has a wieldy majority—for traction. Lakas demonstrated this power to crush moves to oust the President in the impeachment complaint last year. The quashing of the complaint blocked its transmittal to the Senate for an impeachment trial.

The weakness of this strategy built on Lakas' firepower and manpower lies in that it is mounted on the back of the House and that it bypasses the cooperation of the Senate, whose compliance is essential for the success of the constitutional revision drive.

Division, not consensus

It is thus a divisive campaign. It does not lead to consensus.

The strangulation of the impeachment complaint in the House appears to have emboldened Ms Arroyo and given her false confidence that she could push constitutional revision unilaterally, or solely with House, or Lakas, assistance.

These initiatives stretch the stonewall tactic to the limit.

The dim prospect of Senate concurrence to the constituent assembly plan appears to have driven the administration to undertake another bypass operation, i.e., initiating a campaign for a people's initiative through the collection of the signatures of 12 percent of the registered voters on the resolution to amend the Constitution.

Distorting people power

This option may be resorted to if Congress refuses to sit as a constituent assembly or to call a constitutional convention.

Although the President has a reservoir of political allies among provincial officials and congressmen, any attempt to bypass the institutional process on Charter change represents a crude resurrection and a distortion of people power.

NPAs free 9 comrades . . .

As if that wasn't enough, four other inmates facing illegal drugs charges joined the mass breakout on Saturday night.

The rebel rescuers also took off with seven police pistols and a shotgun after locking up the guards in one of the cells.

"It was all over in four minutes. The helpless jail guards were not able to offer any resistance," communist spokesperson Gregorio "Ka Roger" Rosal told the INQUIRER.

It was a black weekend for government forces.

In Samar, NPA rebels killed four soldiers and wounded eight others when they ambushed a convoy from the 801st Brigade in Motioning town at around 10 a.m., the military said.

The soldiers were returning from a medical-dental mission in a nearby town when a 30-strong guerrilla band fired on them in one of the bloodiest rebel attacks in weeks.

In the Batangas incident, the NPA raiders deceived the jail guards by showing up dressed in black fatigue military uniforms and telling the guards they had come to turn over custody of two prisoners.

"The duty guards really thought that the rebels were policemen. They even had two handcuffed men wearing orange shirts to make it appear that (the two were) prisoners," said Supt. Nilo Anzo, city police chief.

When the guards opened the gate, the rebels quickly disarmed them.

The jail lies about 500 meters from the city police station and 1 km from the provincial police headquarters.

Guards end up in jail

"It was definitely well-planned. In 15 minutes, the rebels escaped and got what they wanted," said Anzo. The raid occurred at around 7:45 p.m.

While some rebels were disarming jail officer in charge Leo Rabano in his office, others went to the prison cells for their comrades.

Inmates told investigators the rebels were shouting in Filipino, "Quick, those who are NPAs, get out," implying the detained rebels knew they would be rescued.

The surprised guards were tied up and locked in one of the cells.

The rebels fled in a pickup and three vans. One of the vehicles had a government license plate.

"This only proved that the Red fighters can launch special operations even in key cities and urban areas, contrary to the claim of the enemies that the NPA is now a spent force," Rosal said in a phone interview.

"Expect more tactical operations from the NPA."

In pursuit operations yesterday, members of the Philippine Air Force recovered assorted firearms and 30 land mines following gun battles with suspected rebels in two villages in Balayan, Batangas.

Anzo identified the escaped prisoners as Danilo Mayo, alias Benjamin de la Cruz, Reynaldo "Ka Abet" Rijano, Ronnie "Ka Joel" Ferrer, Noel Uybad, Elison Agnes, Marilou "Ka Johndel" Cataquiz, Lea Gaymay, Precy Balmes, Marian "Ka Jaira" Vibata and Cristituto "Ka Eloy" Galicia.

Ex-prisoners themselves

Mayo, Ferrer, Gaymay, Cataquiz, Balmes and Vibat were captured by government forces on a Batangas pier in 2004.

The escaped prisoners were facing charges of illegal possession of high-powered firearms and explosives.

The nine had been held in three different detention cells inside the provincial jail.

Three of the four nonrebel inmates who escaped were later recaptured.

Provincial jail warden Lutgardo Natanauan said some inmates who saw the attack told investigators that the rebel raiders were themselves former detainees at the provincial jail.

Guarding the coasts

"These NPAs were detained here a few years ago but were freed after posting bail," he said.

Chief Supt. Jesus Verzosa, Calabarzon police director, immediately raised the alert level in the entire region. He said checkpoints had been set up near the boundary of Batangas and Quezon provinces.

"But we are not discounting the possibility that the NPAs will escape toward the Mindoro islands. That's why we have also alerted the Coast Guard," Verzosa told the INQUIRER.

PNP Director General Arturo Lomibao arrived in this city yesterday morning to inspect the provincial jail and meet with law enforcement units.

Natanauan said he would not relieve any of his men despite the jailbreak.

"I think my men were not remiss in their job. They were just really tricked and deceived by the NPA," he said.

The one-hectare jail facility has a maximum capacity of 300 but holds more than 600 prisoners.

"The jail is really overcrowded. But we're doing our best to manage it properly and keep it secure," he said.

Some guards asleep

The jail has a total of 43 jail guards working different shifts.

When the raid happened, only five guards, including the duty officer, were at the facility.

Natanauan said there were actually three other guards at the jail during the attack. "But they were all asleep when the rebels attacked," he said.

Acting on a tip from residents, police conducted follow-up operations in the fishing villages of Barangay Wawa and Barangay Sta. Clara near the Batangas International Port after five speedboats were reportedly seen in the area.

Some members of the city police were busy with security preparations for the city fiesta today, officers said.

"The NPAs could have considered that in planning their attack," Anzo said.

UP student dies during hazing rites

By Marlon Ramos
PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

CALAMBA CITY—AN AGRICULTURE ECONOMICS student at the University of the Philippines at Los Baños died Saturday from severe physical injuries believed suffered during fraternity initiation rites at a resort in this city, police said yesterday.

SPO1 Gabriel Noguera, Calamba police investigator, identified the victim as Marlon Villanueva, 21, of Goodwill Subdivision in Parañaque City.

Police arrested two members of the Alpha Phi Omega fraternity chapter at UPLB who rushed the victim to a nearby hospital. They were identified as Jericho Paril, 25, of Meycauayan, Bulacan, and Brandon Gonzales, 22, of Calauan, Laguna.

The victim was apparently a neophyte, or candidate for membership in the fraternity, police said.

Noguera said police received a telephone call from the Jose P. Rizal Memorial Hospital in Barangay Halang after the victim was brought to the hospital by Paril and Gonzales at about 2:30 a.m.

He said the hospital staff suspected the victim had died from hazing.

He said police were awaiting the results of the autopsy done on Villanueva's remains which bore bruises on the thighs.

"The victim's body was badly beaten, it was black and blue," Noguera told the INQUIRER.

He said Paril and Gonzales refused to cooperate with investigators.

Noguera said the caretaker at Villa Novaleses Resort in Barangay Pansol here told investigators a group of about 20 male and female youths arrived at the place at around 9:30 p.m. on Friday.

"The caretaker saw nothing suspicious about the group and thought it was an ordinary [get-together] of students," he said.

The caretaker said the group hurriedly left the place at around 4 a.m.

After numerous hazing deaths in the past at different colleges and universities, many school officials banned fraternities, only to relent when the students promised to do away with violence during initiation rites. The Senate had also enacted a law banning hazing in all organizations.

Fugitive cop says he's sorry, willing to take punishment

By Luige A. del Puerto

HE WAS FEARED IN HIS PRIME.

But now at age 60, Rizal Alih, casts but a poor shadow of the renegade policeman who had led the raid on Camp Cawa-Cawa in Zamboanga City 16 years ago that left 14 people dead, including a military general and a colonel.

Alih was deported by Malaysian authorities to the Philippines on Saturday after he served eight of a 14-year jail term for illegal possession of firearms.

When he spoke with local reporters yesterday, Alih appeared subdued and remorseful; the fire had left his eyes. If anything, he said he was only glad to be alive.

Breaking into tears at least twice, Alih, who held the general and the colonel hostage during the siege of the camp, yesterday asked for forgiveness from the family of Brig. Gen. Eduardo Batalla and Col. Romeo Abandan who were killed in the botched rescue operation.

Misunderstanding

"I want to ask for forgiveness, but I do not know how to contact them," Alih told the reporters at the Philippine National Police-Custodial Center where he is detained.

Alih said his life no longer belonged to him but to the families of Batalla and Abandan and the other men who died because of his actions.

"I regret that Batalla died. It was an accident," he said. Alih recalled that he was called into Batalla's office. They had a misunderstanding, and the general was killed in the commotion that followed.

Like a father

"Whatever [punishment] they give me, I'm willing to accept it. Even if they kill me, I agree," he said in a mixture of Filipino and English.

Alih sobbed as he narrated how Abandan had been like a father to him. He was always at the official's house, running errands for the family, he said.

Escorted by Malaysian policemen, Alih arrived in the Philippines at 4:45 p.m. Saturday on board Malaysian Airlines from Kuala Lumpur.

A team of Filipino policemen waited for him at the airport to whisk him away to Camp Crame.

Disgruntled troops

Philippine National Police Director General Arturo Lomibao said Alih will be flown to Zamboanga to stand trial for the siege.

"He is charged with multiple murder for the siege," Lomibao said.

Alih fled to Malaysia in the early '90s after leading a small band of disgruntled policemen and soldiers in the takeover of Camp Cawa-Cawa, the regional headquarters of the Philippine Constabulary, in Zamboanga City in January 1989.

For three days, Alih's group held

Batalla, then the regional commander, hostage. During the military assault, the camp burned down and 12 renegades and two hostages were killed.

Alih eluded a massive manhunt but was arrested in Malaysia in 1994 and convicted for illegal possession of weapons.

One of the young officers who stormed the camp shook hands with Alih yesterday.

"I'd like to ask forgiveness from you and your men," Alih told Sr. Supt. Manuel Gaerlan, then a second lieutenant and now chief of the Marikina City Police. Gaerlan lost his trigger finger and was wounded in the left hand during the assault.

"I have no personal remorse or anger with him. If he did what he believed in, I also did my duty. Personally, I have forgiven him," Gaerlan said.

Sneaked out of camp

Then Armed Forces chief of staff Renato de Villa was criticized for his hesitation in ordering an attack before Alih could kill his hostages.

Talking about his escape, Alih said he "sneaked out of the back of the camp."

He then commandeered a vehicle which took him to Campo Muslim in Zamboanga City. From there, he took on a pump boat to Basilan where he rented a twin-engine boat which took him to Sandakan, Malaysia, for P20,000. With an AFP report

'Running priest' leads kids in Edsa protest

By Christian V. Esguerra

TRUE TO FORM, THE RUNNING priest didn't go quietly.

Fr. Robert Reyes, allegedly sacked for his criticism of the local Catholic Church hierarchy, yesterday led some 50 grade schoolers in a march from the Edsa Shrine to the nearby People Power Monument on Edsa.

His transfer last year by Cubao Bishop Honesto Ongtioco took effect yesterday, the Feast of the Sto. Niño, ending the priest's stint at the Our Lady of the Miraculous Medal parish in Project 4, Quezon City.

It was the second time in two years that Reyes had lost a parish. Before his transfer to Project 4, he had been assigned to the Parish of the Holy Sacrifice at UP Diliman.

The INQUIRER earlier reported that according to Fr. Aris Sison, spokesperson of the Diocese of Cubao, Reyes had opted to take a sabbatical after his last assignment.

Apparently unfazed by what he called "a form of subtle rebuke," he organized the afternoon march of children who had lost their homes in a fire in his parish on Dec. 26.

At the People Power Monument where Reyes observed several months of fasting last year, the children wrote letters to President Macapagal-Arroyo and members of the Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines (CBCP).

The President and the bishops have been the focus of Reyes' wrath: Ms Arroyo for allegedly cheating her way to power, and the bishops for purportedly not doing enough to condemn the immorality and illegitimacy of her administration.

The letters generally asked Ms Arroyo to "stop lying, pretending and scandalizing" the children, allegedly, for continuing to hide the truth about her alleged manipulation of the 2004 election.

The children asked the bishops to "teach us right and wrong, guide us to the right path, and inspire us to believe in the future."

According to Reyes, they will personally deliver the letters to Malacañang and the CBCP office in Intramuros, Manila, today.

Told that he might be accused of using the children for his advocacy, he replied: "Never mind if I'm accused of instigating them. These people and their parents just want to air their grievances."

Amid discussions on changing the Constitution supposedly for the good of the country, Reyes said the poor and their sentiments were often unheard.

"Let's not marginalize the poor who comprise 80 percent of our population," he told the INQUIRER.

In the case of the children and their families, what's needed is a decent relocation site. Since the fire, a total of 273 families out of the 500 that lost their homes have been staying at a covered court in Barangay Escopa, he said.

About five days ago, he said, the families became enraged when the local government took away the portable toilets in the area.

Gospel:

1 S 15:16-23
Mark 2:18-22

One day, when the disciples of John the Baptist and the Pharisees were fasting, some people asked Jesus, "Why is it that both the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast, but yours do not?" Jesus answered, "How can the wedding guests fast while the bridegroom is with them? As long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast. But the day will come when the bridegroom will be taken from them and on that day they will fast.

No one sews a piece of new cloth on an old coat, because the new patch will shrink and tear away from the old cloth, making a worse tear. And no one puts new wine into old wineskins, for the wine would burst the skins and then both the wine and the skins would be lost. But new wine, new skins!"

Commentary

Saul disobeys the Lord, greedy for his own kingship rather than the honor of God. God does not want sacrifice of animals, but submission and obedience and so God rejects Saul as the ruler of Israel. This is the history of Israel centuries before Jesus but the seeds are sown early that God does not want sacrifice of animals, or human beings, children or our enemies, or fasts. And in Jesus we discover something new: that we are guests with Jesus at the wedding feast of God, a new people in a new covenant. We are a new cloak of compassion to throw over the world. We are new wine that will bring life to all. And this life, this Spirit is poured into us in baptism where we promise to live as Jesus did before God.

Health pros 'Coast is clear' after DENR amends order score med tourism

By Christian V. Esguerra

NOTWITHSTANDING THE ROSY FORECASTS of a booming medical tourism market in the country, not everyone is upbeat about its impact on the public health sector.

Touted as a viable solution to the country's worsening health crisis, the medical tourism program envisions hordes of foreigners coming to the Philippines for medical treatment they could not otherwise afford in their own countries.

But Philippine hospital workers are not convinced that medical tourism would solve the health sector crisis spawned by budgetary constraints and the exodus of health workers for higher paying jobs abroad.

The employees' unions in all but one major government hospital in Metro Manila have scheduled a huge gathering on Wednesday to tackle the new program.

The unions which belong to the Alliance of Health Workers are not optimistic that medical tourism is the answer.

"It's just a cosmetic measure to make it appear that the government is really doing something to solve the problem," Jossel Ebesate, the group's secretary general, told the INQUIRER yesterday.

Ebesate was appalled that the program was offering world-class health care to foreigners while leaving local patients, particularly the poor, to substandard treatment.

He said the group was not convinced that revenues from medical tourism would be used to help the local health care system get back on its feet.

The gathering, dubbed the Council of Leaders Meeting, will include employees' unions from all government hospitals in the National Capital Region, except for the East Avenue Medical Center. It will be held at the National Children's Hospital on E. Rodriguez Avenue in Quezon City.

During the medical tourism program's launching last Wednesday, Health Secretary Francisco Duque III said the greatest challenge was "to transform economic gains from revenues by health tourism into benefits that will be felt by our people."

"We have to constantly ask—for who are cost-effective services to be provided?" he said in his speech.

Duque later told reporters that the plan was to use the earnings from medical tourism to expand charity services in the public hospitals, essentially by expanding bed capacity for the poor.

Ebesate and his group remain unconvinced, saying the same strategy had been done before but with very few results.

To save the supposedly collapsing health system, he said the salaries and benefits of health professionals must be increased.

He said crucial to this strategy would be the full implementation of the 1992 Magna Carta for Health Workers and the Nursing Law of 2002 which sets the salary of government nurses at between P9,939 and P13,300 a month.

Such a move would send a strong signal that the government was not leaving its health workers out in the cold, he said.

Signature drive on to shut down Rapu-Rapu mine

THE FISHERFOLK OF BICOL WILL BE CASTING for signatures this week as they kick off a campaign to have the Lafayette mine on Rapu-Rapu Island in Albay closed permanently.

Members of Lakas Mangingisda ng Bicol (Lambat-Bicol) hope to gather at least 5,000 signatures from residents in the adversely affected municipalities of the region, church groups and environmental advocates pushing for the shutdown of the mine said.

The signature campaign will start in Rapu-Rapu, site of two mine spills that caused fish kills last year, and the towns of Gubat, Prieto-Diaz and Barcelona in Sorsogon province.

"We intend to get a significant number of signatures ... to inform (the government) that the people are demanding the pullout of Lafayette, and that the government and Lafayette should be jointly held accountable for the mining disaster," the leaders of Lambat-Bicol, an affiliate of the militant fisherfolk alliance Pamalakaya, said in a statement yesterday.

The fishermen are demanding the cancellation of the mining permit of Australian firm Lafayette Mining Inc., which operates the P10.4-billion Rapu-Rapu Polymetallic Project.

The project has been ballyhooed by the Department of Environment and Natural Resources as the flagship project of the revived mining industry in the Philippines.

Lafayette, however, failed to prevent two mine spills on Oct. 11 and Oct. 31 last year. Effluents containing high levels of cyanide were released from tailing dams into adjacent bodies of water, causing fish kills in the coastal community.

Pamalakaya chair Fernando Hicap said the signatures would be submitted to the DENR, the Office of the President and the Australian Embassy in Manila before Congress starts its investigation into the mine spills.

The DENR has fined Lafayette P10.7 million, the biggest penalty imposed on any mining firm in the country so far, for violating the Clean Water Act and the firm's own environmental compliance certificate.

STRONG OPPOSITION, PARTICULARLY from small fishermen, has prompted the Department of Environment and Natural Resources to draft a new order to amend the controversial administrative order allowing the 25-year lease of coastal areas to big investors and local governments.

The DENR is set to limit the areas for lease to depleted mangrove forests and also limit the income-generating activities that could be conducted at the investment sites following consultations with marine scientists.

The new AO, which adopts the suggestions of the scientists, is set to be issued within 30 days.

"Secretary (Michael) Defensor has listened to them. We're already revising the AO based on their observations. His (Defensor) concern really was the conservation of mangrove areas," Protected Areas and Wildlife Bureau director Virgilio Vitug told the INQUIRER in a phone interview.

"We adopted almost all, maybe 75-90 percent of their (scientists') suggestions. We are not favoring commercial use. It's not for big businessmen, the intention is to protect," Vitug said.

Defensor and other DENR officials have been meeting with noted marine scientists like Jurgenne Primavera and other members of the Philippine Association of Marine Science since last month.

The PAWB director said the DENR may limit the income-generating activities allowed at the mangrove sites to aquaculture, but this was still being discussed.

On Nov. 17, 2005, Defensor signed Department Administrative Order 24 which allows for a 25-year lease of "idle and degraded" portions of the country's 266,000 sq km of coastal areas for development, alongside reforestation requirements. The lease would be renewable for another 25 years.

The DAO 24 permits aquasilviculture, pearl farming, mud crab fattening and other non-extractive enterprises in the coastal areas.

Under the DAO, the DENR would have received three percent of the profits from the investments.

Fisherfolk and marine scientists, however, scored the DAO 24, saying it would pave the way for big businesses to take over coastal resources, displacing the country's 1.8 million small fishermen who have first rights to municipal waters.

The fisheries sector is a major source of food and livelihood in the Philippines, where about 900 coastal municipalities depend largely on small-scale fishing.

The Philippine Association of Marine Science said municipal fisheries were already the poorest among the fisheries sectors, contributing only 29 percent of total fisheries production in 2003 compared to 40 percent from aquaculture and 31 percent from commercial fisheries.

"Thus, granting the business sector 25-year permits to plots of 5-10 hectares or more in the traditional fishing grounds of municipal fishers will push this already marginalized sector beyond the edge of poverty into the abyss of despair, frustration and social unrest," a PAMS letter addressed to Defensor in November said.

The scientists also said mangrove reforestation would eventually yield bigger incomes for the communities as the value of goods and services that could be derived from mangroves in their natural state could reach $10,000.

Defensor, however, has cancelled some community-based forest management agreements covering mangrove areas and held by people's organizations that were performing well.

The Tambuyog Development Center said the CBFMA awarded to one of its affiliate community organizations in Cebu had been cancelled despite the planting of 30,000 propagules in five years and a satisfactory evaluation.

Angry Pakistan says hit missed Zawahiri

ISLAMABAD—A DINNER INVITATION TO AL-Qaida's second-in-command triggered a US airstrike in Pakistan's tribal region but Ayman al-Zawahiri failed to show up, Pakistani intelligence officials said on Sunday.

Pakistan condemned Friday's strike, which killed at least 18 people, including women and children, and summoned US Ambassador Ryan Crocker to protest. Thousands of local tribesmen also rallied near the scene, chanting anti-American slogans.

The foreign ministry said on Saturday that foreigners had been near the village of Damadola in the Bajaur region bordering Afghanistan and were the probable target. Pakistani intelligence officials said they were checking reports up to seven foreign militants had been killed and their bodies removed by local supporters. But they said there were no indications Osama bin Laden's deputy, Zawahiri, was there.

"He was invited for the dinner, but we have no evidence he was present," a senior intelligence official said.

Al Arabiya television quoted a source it said had contact with al-Qaida saying Zawahiri was alive. The US government has not commented, but US sources familiar with the operation said it was too early to determine his fate and the remains of the dead would have to be examined to determine whether Zawahiri was among them.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity because of the issue's sensitive nature, said the airstrike was carried out on the basis of "very good" intelligence indicating Zawahiri was at the targeted location.

Another Pakistani intelligence official said two local Islamist clerics, known for harboring al-Qaida militants, had attended the dinner but left hours before the airstrike at 3 a.m.

The US sources said CIA-operated unmanned drones were believed to have been used in the attack. A Pakistani intelligence official said four missiles had been fired.

Washington has offered $25 million each for Zawahiri and Bin Laden, who have been on the run since US-led forces toppled Afghanistan's Taliban rulers in 2001 after the Sept. 11 attacks.

The two have long been thought to be hiding along the Afghan-Pakistan border under the protection of Pashtun tribes.

The angry reaction to the strike comes just days after Pakistan, an important ally in the US-led war on terrorism, lodged a strong protest with US-led forces in Afghanistan, saying cross-border firing in a nearby tribal area last weekend had killed eight people.

Zawahiri is seen as the brains behind al-Qaida and has been its public face, denouncing the United States in repeated video messages, the most recent of which was broadcast this month. Reuters

Kuwait's ailing Emir Jaber dies

KUWAIT—KUWAITI EMIR SHEIKH Jaber al-Ahmad al-Sabah, ruler of the tiny Gulf oil-producing state and a US ally, died on Sunday after a long illness, state media reported. He was 78.

Under the constitution, Crown Prince Sheikh Saad al-Abdulla al-Sabah, 76, will become emir.

But because illness has incapacitated Saad, political analysts expect Prime Minister Sheikh Sabah al-Ahmad al-Sabah to effectively run the country—a role he has played over the past four years.

The illness in the past few years of both Jaber and Saad had sparked concerns at home and abroad over who would rule the Opec nation, which sits on one-tenth of the world's oil reserves and was the main launchpad for the 2003 US-led invasion of Iraq.

"With the utmost of sorrow and sadness, the (royal court) announces to the Kuwaiti people, the Arab and Islamic nations and the peoples of friendly world nations the death of His Highness Sheikh Jaber al-Ahmad al-Jaber al-Sabah," said a royal court statement carried by the state news agency KUNA.

It said the emir, who had ruled Kuwait since Dec. 31, 1977, "passed away at dawn on Sunday."

Jaber had been ailing since suffering a brain hemorrhage in 2001. He had surgery on his leg in the United States in May.

Former Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's troops occupied Kuwait for seven months before US-led forces ousted them in 1991 Gulf War.

The emir returned from exile in Saudi Arabia to lead the rebuilding of a land scarred by killings, torture and brutal rule during the occupation. He also oversaw the rehabilitation of oilfields set on fire by retreating Iraqi troops.

Kuwait said there would be a 40-day official period of mourning and that government offices would be closed for three days from Sunday.

The emir was the 13th ruler of a 245-year-old dynasty that has ruled Kuwait since the Anaiza tribe, to which the al-

Sabahs belonged, migrated from the Arabian hinterland.

Since the fall of Saddam in neighboring Iraq in 2003 and US calls for change in the Middle East, the ruling family had come under intense pressure from both Islamists and pro-Western liberals to loosen its grip on the government and share power.

The ruling family has also been under pressure from parliament and elders within its ranks to break with tradition and replace the ailing crown prince.

The succession process alternates between the two branches of the ruling family—al-Jabers and al-Salems.

Kuwait, a founder Opec member, enjoys one of the world's highest standards of living, despite its reliance on oil exports, unpredictable oil income and huge losses from the 1990-1991 Iraq occupation.

It hosts up to 30,000 US troops and some 13,000 US citizens live in the country.

US actress Shelley Winters dies at 85

LOS ANGELES—ACTRESS SHELLEY WINTERS, the two-time Oscar winner whose roles ranged from glamour girls to tramps, died at a Southern California nursing home early on Saturday, a spokesperson said. She was 85.

Winters died at the Rehabilitation Center of Beverly Hills about 6:15 a.m., a spokesperson there said.

She declined to disclose the cause of death.

Winters was hospitalized in October after suffering a heart attack.

A blond bombshell who was tough, street-wise and outspoken, the Brooklyn, New York-raised Winters specialized in unsympathetic, abrasive mother roles that won her two Academy Awards for best supporting actress.

In 1959, she won an Oscar for her portrayal of the slobbish Mrs. Van Daan hiding with others from the Nazis in "The Diary of Anne Frank." After a variety of other movies, she won again, playing the violent mother of a blind girl in "A Patch of Blue" (1965).

She was also nominated for Oscars for "A Place in the Sun" (1951) and "The Poseidon Adventure" (1972), in which she played a heroine and insisted on doing her own stunt work.

Born Shirley Shrift on Aug. 18, 1920, in East St. Louis, Illinois, Winters moved as a child with her family to Brooklyn, where her father worked as a tailor's helper. Money was so scarce she was out on the street selling magazines at age 9.

She later worked as a Manhattan garment district model and salesgirl before first fulfilling her acting dream in an amateur revue.

Small professional parts on Broadway followed. Spotted by Columbia Pictures mogul Harry Cohn, she spent five years playing small, sexy roles in such films as "What a Woman!" (1943) and "Tonight and Every Night" (1945).

She insistently lobbied director George Cukor for the role of Ronald Colman's mistress in the hit "A Double Life" (1948), which made Hollywood take note of her considerable talent.

Acclaimed roles in "The Great Gatsby" (1949) and "Frenchie" (1951) were followed by the part in "A Place in the Sun" that quashed her sexy image—she played the dowdy, frumpy factory worker made pregnant by Montgomery Clift, who drops her for a radiant Elizabeth Taylor. The role firmly established her reputation as an actress. Reuters

Eminem, ex-wife tie knot once more

ROCHESTER, MICHIGAN—SUPERSTAR RAPPER Eminem remarried his ex-wife Saturday, a month after he announced they were getting back together, his publicist said.

"Marshall and Kim Mathers were married tonight in a small private ceremony at Meadow Brook Hall in Rochester, Michigan," said Dennis Dennehy, a spokesperson for Eminem's label, Interscope Records.

News helicopters hovered overhead and paparazzi congregated outside as the Grammy-winning rapper born Marshall Bruce Mathers III and his high school sweetheart arrived by limousine and were whisked inside the 110-room mansion built for auto baron John Dodge's widow 80 years ago. AP

Half of planet to gather at bird flu meet

BEIJING—OFFICIALS FROM HALF THE NATIONS on the planet will meet in Beijing on Tuesday and Wednesday to raise the $1.5 billion needed to tackle the potential global catastrophe of a bird flu pandemic.

"A global threat needs a global response. That is why it is important to mobilize international cooperation," European Union external affairs commissioner Benita Ferrero-Waldner said Friday.

"It is better to spend now on controlling avian influenza at the source and helping to prevent a new human influenza pandemic than to have to spend much more in a catastrophic event of a human pandemic."

Such calls for international collaboration in the face of the bird flu threat have multiplied in the run-up to this week's donors' conference, a joint initiative by China, the World Bank and the EU.

The deaths of three children in Turkey this month—the first victims outside Southeast Asia and China—and several outbreaks in farms in the east of the country have stoked fears the virus is spreading.

Scientists fear the more the virus spreads, the greater the chance H5N1 will mutate into a form that is easily transmissible between humans and spark a global pandemic that could claim millions of lives.

"There is a real possibility that further mutation of the virus strain might result in sustained human-to-human transmission and a human influenza pandemic" which could kill "millions of people," says a draft declaration to be submitted to the 90 countries and 25 organizations represented in Beijing.

The World Bank has estimated that the potential economic and financial cost of a pandemic could reach $800 billion and that two percentage points would be knocked off world economic growth.

First appearing in Southeast Asia in 2003, the H5N1 strain of bird flu—carried by migratory birds—spread to the Middle East and then to Europe.

Experts do not rule out the possibility that it has also reached Latin America and Africa, giving it a foothold on every continent.

Awful taste

SUDDENLY, WITHOUT WARNING, THE COUNTRY had its first taste of a parliamentary system last week, when political news revolved around the doings, the positioning for leadership and the struggle over strategy, in one political party. Lakas served a heaping spoonful, its different leaders and spokespersons providing various opportunities for access journalism. But the aftertaste has been all too sour.

EDITORIAL Lakas, the ruling party, blithely assumed that its decisions would become political reality. In part, this was simply the confidence of assured politicians talking. (Politics remains the art of the possible, and some Lakas party officials are past masters at selling images and illusions.) But in part, it was also the single-mindedness of a vulnerable party. (Lakas officials know that every skirmish in the so-called great debate on Charter change is one less encounter in the President's crisis of legitimacy.)

On the most basic level, the one that ran through the headline stories of the last several days, this much is clear: Ex-President Fidel Ramos lost the contest of wills with President Macapagal-Arroyo.

The President has come to the conclusion that she no longer needs the "graceful exit" Ramos described last July, when he literally showed up at a Palace under siege and helped rally the troops. This means she has found, or thinks she has found, political equilibrium—that is to say, exactly what she needs to perfect her political balancing act. She did not use such a delicate metaphor, of course; her choice of images, in her battle cry before the party's top leaders, was decidedly violent. "Steeled by bruising battles, we don't need additional training to win over our political foes in every round," she said in one instance. "With our heavy armory of democracy and legitimacy, we shall fight the squads of destabilizers and spoilers in the opposition," she said in another.

All this means is that: one, she has regained the upper hand in her leadership contest with Ramos, the party's founder, and Speaker Jose de Venecia, the party president; and two, she believes she is in a position to keep her main allies satisfied and the opposition outmaneuvered till 2010.

To be sure, the outcome was foreordained, from the moment the venue was chosen: The caucus was held, not in a neutral function room in a hotel, but right in the heart of Malacañang. The Saturday caucus, in other words, was a coronation, not a convention.

Ramos' high-profile, high-stakes pressuring of Ms Arroyo must have also helped seal the outcome. If there is anything political players have learned about the President in the last several months, it is that she is truly her mother's daughter. She does not take criticism lightly; she may not seek confrontation, but when pressed she is ready to do battle. The resignation of the Hyatt 10 from her Cabinet may have hurt her; their demand that she, too, resign could only have steeled her resolve. Ditto with Ramos' insistence that she cut her term short.

The internal politics of the Lakas party aside, however, the road to Charter change is not as smooth as the President and her allies describe it. As we pointed out yesterday, this road map wrongly assumes either a complacent Senate or a compliant Supreme Court.

But this won't stop the Lakas party from riding the Charter change express. That's a given. What the party needs to consider is Ramos' next move, and that of its allies in the administration coalition.

Lakas, after all, came into being after Ramos, then the defense secretary and Corazon Aquino's preferred successor, lost the presidential nomination of the Laban ng Demokratikong Pilipino to Ramon Mitra. Today, his political prime is behind him, but does he feel strongly enough about the issues to repeat history?

Also, Lakas is the central party in the administration coalition, but by no means is it the only one. In the House of Representatives, especially, the dynamics of relationship with the LDP, the Liberal Party and the Nationalist Peoples Coalition is key to the coalition's political dominance. Will the other parties accept Lakas' "tight but doable" timetable and also hop on the train?

In last week's taste test, we could have sworn some of the Lakas party's partners looked like they were gagging too.

Who is mastermind of 'No-El' provision?

THE INQUIRER REPORTED LAST SATURDAY that fellow congressmen have pointed to Speaker Jose de Venecia as the mastermind of the hated "no-election" provision of the draft Constitution prepared by the Arroyo-created Consultative Commission (ConCom). Records of the ConCom show that it was former Rep. Gerry Espina (Biliran) who authored the "No-El" provision. Whether or not it was JDV who prodded Espina to make the proposal, only the two of them know.

Bribing incumbent elective officials with a three-year extension of their terms of office, without having to run and spend for re-election, does seem to have the characteristic trademark of JDV. But that is not an original trick. President Marcos did it before. When he had a new Constitution written by a Constitutional Convention, a provision was inserted, automatically making ConCom members who voted in favor of the draft Charter members of Parliament (the Batasan). The Arroyo-appointed ConCom members copied the spirit of that provision, which is actually a blatant form of bribery.

Aside from the three-year bonus for incumbent officials, the ConCom members gave President Macapagal-Arroyo the power to appoint 30 unelected persons to the Parliament. Among the 30 are members of the present ConCom who wrote the draft Charter.

It is a traditional practice of legislative bodies to ban their members from enjoying benefits that they themselves write into a Constitution or a law (an increase in salary, for example). Such benefits can only apply to the new set of officials who will replace them. This is to prevent legislators from using their powers for their own benefit.

But the members of the present ConCom have done exactly that. They abused their powers by passing a provision that would benefit themselves. They could have banned themselves from being appointed to the Parliament, as is customary, but they shamelessly did not do that. It is clear they, too, want a free ride to Parliament. Kapalmuks talagal

Anyway, Espina's motion was defeated in the voting. Only 16 members voted for "No-El" while 18 voted against it.

The next day, however, Floor Leader Sergio Apostol (also a former congressman), who had voted against the Espina proposal, moved for a reconsideration of the decision. In this second voting, "No-El" won 22-19. How did this happen?

In the second balloting, some members who originally voted against the No-El voted in favor of that provision (like Apostol and Sr. Luz Soriano); two others abstained (Rep. Victor Ortega and newsman Gil Abarico); and one happened or chose to be absent (Rep. Gualberto Duavit).

Curiously, Espina, the author of the "No-El" provision, voted against the approval of the Charter, although his proposal was included in the draft Constitution.

The interesting questions are: Why did some members change their votes? Why did Apostol move for a reconsideration of the decision he himself helped bring about? Who talked to them to make them change their minds? Was it JDV? What did he dangle before them to convince them to somersault?

If JDV was indeed behind these ConCom members' change of mind, it would show you his dexterity in seducing colleagues into agreeing to his way of thinking. (If he were to use this seductive talent on women, he could be another Don Juan.) That is why he was able to seduce congressmen into electing him to be their Speaker for several terms already. (He formed the Rainbow Coalition from members of different political parties.) That is why he is sure that once we have a parliamentary government, he would be the new prime minister. And that is why he is confident that he can do the same thing in the new Parliament. For the members of the incoming Parliament will mostly be the same greedy, grasping and opportunist congressmen we have now. And JDV has proven to them, time and time again, that the story about finding a pot of gold at the foot of the "Rainbow" is true.

One official who sticks out as a probable victim of JDV's seduction is Gov. Ben Evardone of Eastern Samar, who is ironically a former journalist and, therefore, should know better. Evardone is the front man of the Union of Local Authorities of the Philippines (ULAP), the association of local government officials behind the move to gather signatures for a "people's initiative" in case the Constituent Assembly play is blocked by the Senate. He seems to be enamored of a parliamentary/federal system of government. He should realize that in case that happens, his province would be among the worst hit.

Eastern Samar is among the poorest provinces in the country. In a federal system, the provinces will have to fend for themselves. They won't get any funding from the national government as much as they do now. They will have to pay their own police forces, health personnel, teachers, legislatures, etc. The departments of the national government will have to be replicated in the provincial level. The rich provinces and cities in Luzon, in the Visayas (Cebu and Bacolod) and in Mindanao (Davao and, perhaps, Cagayan de Oro) will be able to support themselves. But what about the poor provinces? How will they support themselves?

They will be forced to tax their constituents more. But as they say, you can't squeeze blood out of a turnip. How can you squeeze more taxes out of the poor people of Eastern Samar and similar provinces? Most of the people in these areas are farmers and fishermen who can't afford to pay more taxes.

Local government officials are seduced by the idea of more autonomy for themselves. But think what could happen when the funding from the national government would be shut off. Their constituents might chase them out of their provinces.

Mob rule

THERE'S THE RUB

Conrado de Quiros

mand that she resign or be ousted from power? That was my complaint last July with the position taken by Corazon Aquino and the members of the "Hyatt 10," and that has been my complaint with the position they have maintained afterward, after they metamorphosed into various organizations with various names. Never once, in the statements they issued calling for GMA to resign, did they mention that she cheated in the elections. The "Hyatt 10" expressly said they were not judging GMA on accusations she did so, they were resigning because there were "pressing concerns confronting the nation at the core of which lay issues of leadership and credibility." Cory expressly said as well she wasn't judging GMA either on her apology, she was asking her to resign because "the country cannot continue in its present tumultuous state."

Why should problems of leadership and credibility and a tumultuous state of affairs be sufficient reason for asking a legitimate head of state to resign or be overthrown? If so, then all the presidents of this country should have been asked to resign or be overthrown. In Er-ap's case at least we had an impeachment trial to suggest—even if, as his camp points out, it was never proven—he betrayed the public trust. If GMA did not cheat in the elections, if she is the duly constituted President of this country, who is Cory to demand she resign? Who are the Hyatt 10 to demand she resign? Who is Ramos to demand she resign?

But, of course, they are loath to mention that GMA cheated in the last elections. Because then we have to ask them as well why they stood by and said nothing while she did so. Because then we have to ask them why they continued to stand by and said nothing after she was proclaimed President while the nation slept.

But if GMA cheated in the elections—and that is pretty much the only certainty we have in this country—then why should she be given all sorts of options to choose why and when she should resign? At the very least, what is Ramos telling this country, that every time a candidate for the highest position of the land cheats in elections, we will change the government to give him or her a graceful exit? That is idiotic. Which is what Charter change is as a solution to an illegitimate presidency. Which is what Charter change is to putting a closure to the problem of someone perverting the most basic institution of democracy.

First remove an illegitimate President from office, then talk Charter change till you're blue in the face. The problem is a moral one, the solution is a moral one. The problem is that GMA cheated in the elections, the solution is for her to resign forthwith or to be ousted. It is not for Ramos to decide the form and schedule of her resignation, it is for the people to do so. That form is unconditional, and that schedule is immediate. The farce has gone on long enough.

Ironically, all that Ramos' antics show are the infinite dangers of a parliamentary system, which he has been earnestly pushing as the solution to this country's problems. They show that if you have a political system where politicians leave and join parties faster than they wear clothes, where the party in power—in this case Lakas—can dominate national life, you are not going to have less personality-based politics, you are going to have more of it. What you are going to have are people like Ramos and De Venecia and Prospero Pichay and their ilk decreeing who resigns and who does not, who is wrong and who is not, who keeps power and who does not. For no other reason than that, it is the way they want it. That is not a politics of principle or ideology.

That is mob rule.

The future of Charter change

TO HEAR SPEAKER JOSE DE VENECIA SPEAK OF Charter change, one would think that it's all over but the cheering. The President's recent incantation that there should be Charter change by the middle of the year should assure De Venecia even more in his belief. The reality, however, is not that way at all. The Senate has so far stood firm against the blandishments from the House of Representatives. And in the end, the Charter change issue will have to go to the Supreme Court for resolution.

Resolutions coming from the Court are rarely instant. For instance, we are still waiting for the resolution of the challenge to Executive Order 464.

At the moment, the biggest obstacle to Charter change is the Senate. Charter change can be initiated only by Congress. If the Senate refuses to participate, Charter change cannot be initiated. Congress has two houses and the act of only one house is not an act of Congress. If, under the Constitution neither house may adjourn for more than three days without the consent of the other, with greater reason such an important move as initiating Charter change may not be done by one house without the consent of the other.

Indeed, the Senate might decide to participate in a Constituent Assembly. Such fact alone, however, does not mean that the Senate has consented to Charter change. To consent means to approve a proposed change. And the Constitution says that this can be achieved by a vote of three-fourths of all its members.

The computation of the required three-fourths vote has now become a subject of intense debate. The final resolution of this debate, contrary to the desire of the President, cannot possibly be achieved before the middle of the year. Until the controversy becomes actual, that is, until either the House or Senate acts, the Court will not step in.

From my listening post, I have heard three modes of vote computation. The most liberal of these is the one in the mind of De Venecia, which I consider is a cry of desperation. Reportedly, for the Speaker, even if only one senator attends a session of a Constituent Assembly, there can be a valid proposal of amendment, provided that the number of votes approving the proposal reaches three-fourths of all the members of the House and of the Senate added together. How the act of one senator can be the act of the whole Senate is beyond me.

SOUNDING BOARD

Fr. Joaquin G. Bernas, S.J.

Another mode of computation, which I understand might be considered by some well-placed members of the judiciary, is that a majority vote of the members of the Senate will suffice to make the proposal a proposal of the whole Congress. So far, however, I have not heard anyone openly espousing such a mode.

A third mode of computation is the strict mode. This is what I personally hold; specifically, that the vote required is three-fourths of all the members of the Senate and three-fourths of all the members of the House, taken separately. In support of this position is the fact that Congress is bicameral and a bicameral body votes separately. When the Constitution wants the two houses to vote jointly, it says so. This it does when Congress is authorized to override a declaration of martial law. And when Congress can act only in joint session—as in the case when it is called to declare the existence of a state of war—the Constitution specifically commands that they vote separately. Similarly, under the 1935 Constitution, when Congress could propose amendments only if assembled in joint session, the Constitution commanded that they vote separately. The reason is simple: voting jointly, unless authorized as an exception by the Constitution, destroys the bicameral character of Congress. Thus, the apparent vagueness of the constitutional text on Charter change must be interpreted in the light of the bicameral structure of Congress. Structural interpretation is one of the legitimate modes of constitutional construction.

As I said at the start, all of this will ultimately have to be decided by the Supreme Court. At the moment, we can only try to guess what winds are blowing in the Supreme Court.

Another issue which the Supreme Court may have to face is the matter of initiative and referendum. This is what is behind the signature drive launched by local government officials. Can this be used to hasten the realization of the President's dream of Charter change by June this year? I am afraid not—because of two major obstacles. First, the Constitution says that "Congress shall provide for the implementation of the exercise of this right." Congress did pass an initiative and referendum law; but in 1997 the Supreme Court ruled that the law as crafted was not good enough for Charter change. True, the Supreme Court then said that the system "should no longer be kept in the cold . . . Congress should not tarry any longer in complying with the constitutional mandate . . ." However, to date, Congress has not complied.

It might encourage those relying on initiative and referendum—to achieve Charter change soonest—to know that the decision which ruled against the sufficiency of the existing law was by a vote of 8 to 5, with both Chief Justice Artemio Panganiban and Justice Reynato Puno dissenting. Unfortunately, however, (or fortunately), even if the 1997 decision is reversed tomorrow, it would not help the cause of De Venecia and the President. Initiative and referendum can achieve "emendments," that is, minor changes in the Constitution; but it cannot achieve "revision," or a major overhaul of the Constitution, such as a shift from a presidential to a parliamentary system, or from a bicameral to a unicameral system, or from a unitary to a federal system.

Would we have Charter change by June? I would not bet on it.

It's the curriculum

"IT'S THE CURRICULUM, STUPID!" THE AMERICANS EXCLAIMED when they were told that their education system was not effective.

So did the Filipinos, when they were told the same thing. That's what Dr. Isagani Cruz is saying in his book, "The Basic Education Curriculum in 17 Easy Lessons."

At a recent dinner celebrating the golden wedding anniversary of Rody and Mayette Lichauco, I happened to be seated beside Rody's brother Ding. In times like this, I never miss a chance to talk about the Education Revolution.

COMMENTARY

Eugenia Duran Apostol

My egghead dinner companion's gut reaction to our advocacy was crisp, concise and not unexpected. "It's the curriculum. That's what we should look into," Ding said as he contemplated the hors d'oeuvres.

Afterwards, I did a bit of research and I found out that the Department of Education's textbook definition of curriculum is that "it is a systematic group of experiences or sequences of courses or subjects required for graduation or certification in the elementary and secondary levels of education."

Hmmm...

There's more to it than this, of course. Any educator will tell you that a curriculum is designed to meet certain pre-determined objectives. For instance, there's a set of simple exercises for color and shape recognition in the curriculum for pre-schoolers.

On the other hand, the various curricula being implemented under our educational system are mandated by law to give "maximum contribution toward the attainment of national development goals." One of these goals is "to achieve and strengthen national unity and consciousness, and preserve, develop and promote desirable cultural, moral and spiritual values in a changing world." Ostensibly, through a meticulously crafted curriculum, our educational institutions should be able to "inculcate love of country, teach the duties of citizenship, and develop moral character, personal discipline, and scientific, technological and vocational efficiency."

(In case you're wondering, the above quotes come from Batas Pambansa Blg. 232, also called the Education Act of 1982. As far as I can tell, this is the prevailing legislation that provides for the establishment and maintenance of the Philippine education system. The newer RA 9155 [the Governance of Basic Education Act] passed in 2001 focuses on establishing a governance framework and defines levels of, authority and accountability in the DepEd. Plainly put, it was already very clear to us in 1982 that the education system is a key factor in our growth as a nation.)

How near are we to the attainment of these lofty goals?

Let's do a "Chapter Search" to January 2005. (Notice that I did not say "Rewind." We're in a digital world after all.) In his keynote address at the Unesco National Conference, Foreign Secretary Alberto Romulo quoted the United Nations resolution declaring 2005-2015 as the Decade of Education for Sustainable Development where "the vision of education for social development is a world where everyone has the opportunity to benefit from quality education and learn the values, behavior and lifestyle required for a sustainable future and for positive social transformation."

To attain this vision, we have to have a truly responsive curriculum in place.

Secretary Romulo also pointed out that one of the policy recommendations on education—formulated at the July 2003 Conference on Globalization with a Human Face held in Japan—was that "curriculum development must be the product of a consultative process that involves all stakeholders including civil society, local communities, parents and students."

Ding Lichauco's heart was in the right place when he said that we really should look into the curriculum if we want our education system to be world-class. The good news is that in 2002, the DepEd not only looked but actually made major revisions to the existing curriculum for elementary and high school. The output of this undertaking was the controversial Revised Basic Education Curriculum (RBEC), more popularly known as the Makabayan Curriculum. The merits—as well as the downside—of the RBEC are until now the subject of furious debate—which is probably why its full and widespread implementation is yet to be.

When he was still education undersecretary, Dr. Cruz maintained the view that the responsibility for forming a new curriculum should be removed from the DepEd. "Sincere though most of them are, the DepEd officials have only an official view of the curriculum. As any educator knows, the official view is only one of many equally valid ways to look at the public school curriculum. Curricular change is not managed by a secretary or undersecretary, not even by an entire 480,000-strong Department of Education. It is managed and will be managed by 75 million Filipinos," said Dr. Cruz in 2001, two years before his sentiments were validated at the Japan Globalization Conference.

Dr. Cruz called this undertaking the People Power Model of Curricular Change. "A real curriculum should be a couple of volumes long, because it would contain learning competencies, lesson plans, reference materials and all the other things demanded by educational theory. The very fact that [the RBEC] is only a few pages long (should cue us that it is up to us) as parents of children in public schools, as teachers in public schools, as concerned citizens, to fill in the huge gaps in the RBEC," said Dr. Cruz.

We say this is what the Education Revolution is all about. What and how our children learn is our collective responsibility.

That they grow up to become socially responsible citizens steeped in democratic principles is our moral imperative.

From the islands to the highlands

DAVAO CITY, HOST TO THE 25th ASEAN Tourism Forum (ATF), and its environs have been in a festive atmosphere since Friday. The regional forum, which kicked off last Friday with a meeting of tourism ministers at the world-renowned Pearl Farm Beach Resort in nearby Island Garden City of Samal, is expected to gather until Jan. 21 more than 2,000 foreign and local participants, not only from the 10-country Asean bloc but also from Japan, China, the United States and Europe.

While the main objective of the nine-day trade and travel event is to promote Asean as one of the world's major tourism destinations, local organizers touted the hosting of ATF as a "coming-out party" for Mindanao; but especially for Davao City, which in 2003 fell into a "state of lawless violence" after the city's main airport and seaport were bombed. Hosting an international event like the ATF organizers say, gives Davao a fitting but rare opportunity to once again assert its eminent position not only as the political center of the South but also as Mindanao's economic and tourism hub.

To "wow" the ATF participants, Mayor Rodrigo Duterte's administration, in tandem with the private sector, poured millions of pesos to make Davao "a city in bloom." Probably the city's most visible makeover is the 600 decorative street lampposts that feature the purple-colored rare orchid waling-waling, giving the city's nocturnal landscape a welcoming glow. Thousands of newly acquired trash bins have also been installed all around the city, with Duterte warning to run after garbage violators and throw them at the city's dump. An extensive beautification drive has led many downtown barangays and private establishments to refurbish and tidy up their premises, even ridding government lots of illegal structures erected by informal settlers.

To connect the participants to Davao's past, there is the renovated Davao Museum of History and Ethnography, which was opened last Saturday. In addition, there are the Mindanao Trade Expo (showcasing the island's artworks, crafts and products) and the Travel Exchange Exhibit

KRIS-CROSSING MINDANAO

Carlos Isagani T. Zarate

(held in different venues), which also feature other areas of Mindanao.

Tomorrow, a mini-festival show, complete with the street-dancing and pomp that attend the annual Kadayawan Festival, will be opened at the Central Bank.

But, probably, the most elaborate preparation made by the city was in the area of security. Hundreds of regular and auxiliary police and military personnel have been deployed throughout the city to the look out for potential saboteurs. Even the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) has offered to help prevent possible terrorist attacks. The tough-talking Duterte has also ordered a "preemptive strike" on suspected terrorists, saying a "terror threat" has become "very imminent," that is why "we have increased [the number] of security forces and we are trying our best to control the situation. With or without the threat, the ATF will go on," Duterte said.

Aside from the expected immediate economic bonanza—organizers expect the local autonomy to generate P85 million from the forum—local tourism stakeholders also want to woo potential foreign investors to cash-in on the region's largely untapped eco-tourism potential. "We will highlight the diversity of Davao through our island-to-highland campaign," said At Boncato, vice chair of the ATF local host committee and chair of the Davao Tourism Association (Data). Included in the "highlights" are Igacos, whose beaches rival those of Boracay's; the highland resorts of Davao City, like the Eden Garden Resort; the Mt. Apo National Park; and the Philippine Eagle Reservation in Malagos.

On the side, it is hoped that, through the ATF, foreign investors will be lured to revive the mothballed $300-million Samal Casino Hotel, one of the flagship projects of former President Fidel Ramos, and previously operated by Ekrand Berhad Holdings, a Malaysian conglomerate. Its grand and lavish opening several years ago notwithstanding, the 300-room casino hotel has been losing millions of pesos since—leaving in limbo the fate of hundreds of agrarian reform beneficiaries who were persuaded to lease their CARP-awarded lands for the promise of big income that never materialized.

From all indications, the holding of the ATF in Davao definitely has given the tourism industry (particularly in Davao and Mindanao) a big boost and, for that matter, might even help ease the country's economy. But it could also turn out to be just a panacea.

As the latest SWS survey showed, Mindanao remains one area of the country where the incidence of poverty is among the highest.

"We have to be cautious in looking at tourism as the be-all and end-all of our economic problems," commented lawyer Angela Librado-Trinidad, chair of the Davao City Council's Committee on Women and Children.

For one, she said, a tourism-induced economic development, in most cases, also gives rise to social problems, like the proliferation of sex-trade. On the other hand, since the tourism industry is largely cornered by big business, like the airline and hotel owners, its economic benefits hardly benefit the many poor Filipinos, added Trinidad. "At most it can provide temporary economic relief for the people but not in the long run. What we need are industries that provide permanent, not temporary jobs, and adequate compensation for the people."

Indeed, our people "from the islands to the highlands" need more than just momentary pomp.

Behind our Constitutions, past and present

A DECADE OR SO AGO, A MOVEMENT CALLED Demokrasya: Ipagtanggol ang Konstitusyon (Democracy: Defend the Constitution) was launched with this ringing statement: "Some people would amend the Constitution to do away with 'waste'; to make the government 'more responsive'; to eliminate 'gridlock'—as if these weren't government fault." The movement was headed by the late Justice Cecilia Muñoz-Palma. Also in it were former UP president Jose Abueva, Solita Monsod and the late Sen. Ambrosio Padilla.

That they got nowhere is demonstrated by the fact that Abueva wanted parliamentary government and federalism so badly that he would settle for them in name, if not in fact, merely to achieve some sort of victory in the twilight of his life. The decades-long dedication of people like Abueva has been seized upon by people who have no affection for democracy. People who would much rather conduct deals among themselves without having to bother with things like public opinion, a national electorate, or the principle of checks and balances.

These people would amend the Constitution to do away with "waste"; to make the government "more responsive"; to eliminate "gridlock"—as if all these ills weren't the indications of a system frantically trying to prevent the complete collapse of a republican government. In other words, these people are against balances but are all for checks—so long as they aren't postdated, or bounced.

As it is, our present Constitution—which will be 19 years old on Feb. 2—may not survive long enough to reach its 20th year. It is useful at this point, to begin by revisiting the decision to replace the 1935 Constitution and the drafting of the present Constitution.

When it was still in force, the 1935 Constitution was held to contain two major flaws. The first was the broad definition of the conditions that justified the imposition of martial law, which did not specify any limitations as to its duration or extent. Vicente Albano Pacis, belatedly to his dying day that the provision on martial law was copied word for word from the Jones Law (which served as a "colonial basic law" before the establishment of the Commonwealth), but minus the Jones Law proviso requiring the governor general to submit, for approval or disapproval, his action to the president of the United States. According to Pacis, this was done deliberately, precisely to offer presidents a means to establish absolute power.

THE LONG VIEW

Claro M. Recto did make a speech in the 1950s, cautioning the public on how susceptible to abuse the provision on martial law was; that no one bothered to amend the provision, despite Recto's warning, revealed how it never occurred to the people that such an abuse was likely to happen. No sense worrying about incipient dictators when no incumbent president (except Ferdinand Marcos) was ever able to enjoy legitimate second terms in the first place (though had Manuel Roxas Sr. and Ramon Magsaysay Sr. lived, they almost surely would have been re-elected).

The second flaw of the 1935 Charter was seen to lie in its being a "colonial document." Its colonial nature was the rationale for the Constitutional Convention in 1971. And yet, after the adoption of the 1973 Constitution, affection for the junked basic law continued. This affection persisted because of what could only be described as the highly irregular circumstances under which the 1973 Constitution was "approved." From the very start, observers and critics (imprisoned or not) of Marcos pointed out that a new Charter, in order to be ratified legally, had to be accepted in a national referendum. Marcos's shoeing everybody into village assemblies (the ancestor of the proposed local government people's initiative), where they were asked to raise their hands to signify their acceptance of the railroaded new Charter, hardly constituted a referendum in the accepted manner.

The new Charter's validity was questioned before the Supreme Court (Javellana v. the Executive Secretary) in 1973. A messy decision—in which five points were raised—resulted when six justices chose to uphold the validity of the new Constitution, with four independent justices dissenting: this did nothing to settle the issue in people's minds, and served only to tarnish the Supreme Court's image.

In 1981, former President Diosdado Macapagal, who had at first feared for his life and safety under the Bagong Lipunan (New Society), took the bold (and symbolic) step of reconvening the ConCon, "securing" (in the words of Alice Colet Villadolid in an INQUIRER commentary published about a decade ago) the attendance of "130 brave delegates of the total number of 311. They issued a proclamation that the Charter had not been validly ratified and that all actions based on it were null and void. Macapagal told the foreign press that without the barangay-ratified Charter, President Marcos must abide by the Constitution of 1935, which prohibited further extension of his term." Marcos, of course, just snickered at them.

Two years later, Ninoy Aquino came home and was murdered. The dictatorship's implosion became irreversible. In his arrival statement, which was widely publicized in the days that followed his murder (it was printed in full in Mr. & Ms), Ninoy called for the restoration of all "rights and freedoms" in the 1935 Constitution—but not a return to the Charter itself. It would have been impolite for Ninoy, who was hoping to talk Marcos into being reasonable, to call for the junking of the Marcos 1973 Constitution. Getting Marcos to step down was a tall enough order. Even Ninoy had to concede that Marcos (as Francisco Nemenzo wrote, after Edsa) "had irretrievably consigned the 1935 Constitution to the dustbin of history."

Incorrigible US soldiers

IF THE RP-US VISITING FORCES AGREEMENT indeed provides that American soldiers accused of violating Philippine laws should remain under the custody of the US Embassy until their indictment, so be it. (PDI, 12/29/05)

What is more important is that the prosecution of the accused should take its course. Let us not waste too much time debating the already much-ballyhooed custody issue. These debates only expose newer American lapdogs on Philippine soil.

Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye may be right in saying that the case against the four US soldiers in the Subic rape case is an isolated one. Only for now, perhaps—or until we shall have sent these rapists behind bars.

Of course, Bunye conveniently forgot the legions of Filipino women who had been raped with impunity by American soldiers many years ago in Clark Air Base. Add to that the rape cases also committed by US servicemen who were stationed in Japan under the Japan-US Status of Forces Agreement (Sofa).

What comes to public mind is this inescapable impression: Everywhere else, American soldiers are incorrigible rapists. If only for that, lawyer Katrina Legarda is right in saying that the VFA was a wrong move.

San Beda rector's act of discretion

I DO NOT WISH TO PICK A QUARREL WITH the esteemed Justice Isagani Cruz over his Jan. 8 column. He is a jurist and a man of letters for whom I have only tremendous respect and admiration. I have had the honor of inviting him on different occasions to lecture at the Philippine Judicial Academy, and the joy of being favored with an acceptance on his part.

Fr. Anscar Chupungco, O.S.B., rector-president of San Beda College, had earlier consulted with me on the issue and had asked me to read some of the letters addressed to him on the controversy. I ventured some views, strongly suggesting something in the nature of a Joe de V "win-win" solution.

I perfectly understand the position of the faculty. Many of them are with me in the Graduate School of Law, and I know them to be persons of intellectual acumen and integrity. I also understand why Father Anscar took the position he had taken.

I submit for consideration the following propositions:

1. Father Anscar merely approved the recommendation of the dean of the College of Law. He did not by any means intend to pass the responsibility to make a decision to Dean Virgilio Jara, but it should also be clear that his action was neither whim nor fancy. Administratively, it was the more prudent course of action for the rector-president to approve the dean's recommendation because the dean is at ground-zero.

2. Father Anscar was advised that academic freedom, according to Camacho v. Coresis,

G.R. 134372 (Aug. 22, 2002) was principally the freedom of the institution and then, too, the freedom of the individual professor. It was his reading of the doctrine of that case that the matter of "who may be admitted to study"—and therefore admission and retention policies—pertained to the academic freedom of the institution and, therefore, of San Beda as a corporate entity.

3. Father Anscar had difficulty with the concept of "autonomy" of the College of Law because it has always been his understanding that the College of Law is integral to the corporate institution and is, in that measure, not "autonomous."

When he was asked by the dean of the College of Law to act on the latter's recommendation, Father Anscar exercised an act of discretion, one that I believe he can properly perform under the laws governing education, as well as under the corporate and administrative guidelines of San Beda College.

I hope that these points contribute to a greater understanding of the issue, which I fervently pray will not be unduly protracted. I wish to end by noting that Prof. Carlo Cruz, though I never had the privilege of meeting him personally, will be sorely missed. Being the son of an illustrious father, he cannot be any less. I pray, however, that Our Lady of Monserrat, for whom every Bedan has a fond devotion, will gently lead his footsteps back to Mendiola.

Picop, cancer cases: no causative link

THIS CONCERNS AN INQUIRER REPORT Titled "Big C haunts Bislig City folk." (PDI, 1/11/05)

The news article gives the impression that cancer cases in Bislig have reached alarming proportions due to the pulp mill operations of Picop Resources Inc. For the sake of fairness and responsible reporting, we submit this letter for publication.

Summarized below are the cancer cases, male and female, recorded in the Philippines in 2005 by the Philippine Cancer Society-Manila Cancer Registry. The numbers are crude rates per 100,000 people.

In comparison, the crude rates and cancer cases in Mangagoy and Tabon, Bislig City for the period 2000-2005 are listed:

	2005 PHILS. M/F CR	2000-05, MGY/TABON CR	CASES
Maxillo- liary/oral	7.3	1.8	1
Bone/ leukemia	10.0	7.3	4
Brain	3.6	1.8	1
Breast/ ductile	34.0	20.1	11
Cervical	17.6	3.7	2
Colonic	11.2	1.8	1

Gall bladder	3.2	1.8	1
Gastric	9.4	0	0
Laryngeal	4.1	1.8	1
Liver	18.2	1.8	1
Lung	41.1	18.3	10
Rectal	20.5	5.5	3
Thyroid	8.5	5.5	3

Population of Mangagoy and Tabon: 54,719
CR: Crude Rate per 100,000
(Source: A. Philippine Cancer Society-Manila Cancer Registry; B. Andres Soriano Memorial Hospital Cooperative and Bislig District Hospital)

The facts are very clear. The reported cases and crude rates in Barangays Mangagoy and Tabon over a six-year period are substantially below the number of cases recorded in the entire Philippines in 2005. And to think that the two barangays are a high-density area: it has a population of 54,719, more than half of Bislig's 97,860 (NSO, 2000).

Needless to say, there is not even a need to discuss whether there is a causative link between the cancer cases and Picop's pulp mill operations. The recorded cases themselves prove this is not an issue.

16 drown, 4 missing in fluvial procession

By Jani Arnaiz, Joey Gabieta and Connie E. Fernandez, PDI Visayas Bureau

MAASIN CITY—THE FLUVIAL parade in honor of the feast of the Holy Child Jesus yesterday took a tragic turn when 16 people, 14 of them children, drowned after their boat capsized in the waters off San Ricardo town on Panaon Island, Southern Leyte.

Residents of Barangay Inulinan cancelled all festivities to mourn the dead, especially the children aged between 2 and 16.

"It is very quiet here. Residents have cancelled their plans for the fiesta after what happened," said SPO4 Benjamin Alterado, San Ricardo police chief.

Among the scrapped events was the Sinulog competition among five groups of students at the San Ricardo National School grounds that would have followed the fluvial parade.

Alterado said the ML Jun Jay, owned by the town's Vice Mayor Fiel Culpa, was leading 15 small pumpboats in the procession. At its prow was the image of the Holy Child Jesus mounted on a Styropor material.

The boat carried 100 people, including members of the Drums and Bugle Corps of the San Ricardo Elementary School.

Alterado said the fluvial parade kicked off at about 8:30 a.m. at the wharf in Barangay Inulinan at the town proper. Most of the passengers, he added, sat on the right side to get a view of the sea.

After sailing about 200 meters from the port, the vessel made a turn on its way back, but it tilted on the side and capsized.

The other boats tried to reach the overturned motor launch and rescue the passengers.

Among those recovered was the floating image of the Sto. Niño.

Twenty-two passengers were brought to the district hospital in nearby Pintuyan town, a 15-minute boat ride from San Ricardo.

Sixteen people were declared dead on arrival at the hospital. Among them were Rachel, 3, and Isidro, 4, all surnamed Colajara; Jazzel May Bacal, 9; Carmel Collao, 4; Analyn Rodillas, 16; Raymund Angub, 14; Rosalie Olandrina, 45; John Christian Lim, 2; Ken Solihon, 7; Christian John Labra, 6; Jocel Mae Bacud, 9; Allan James Almeda, 10; and Lyn Gae Bonotan, 11.

Also killed were Evengeline Refugio, 42, and her children Justicio, 8, and Ma. Encha Christy, 2.

Alterado said four persons were missing. They were Benjamin Vestal, 34, and daughter Rhea Patria, 4; Jeros Galabo, 7, and Jenny Abuelo, 9.

Members of the Southern Leyte Emergency Rescue Team, the Pintuyan and San Ricardo police and Air Force divers based in Cebu were scouring the seas to look for the missing.

Gov. Rosette Lerias asked for two helicopters from the 8th Infantry Battalion to help in the rescue operation.

Culpa said she did not know if there was clearance from the Philippine Coast Guard for her boat to sail or if it was overloaded.

"The boat can only accommodate about 100 persons, but during that time, there were more than that number who were on board of ML Jun Jay," Mayor Virginia Mejia told the INQUIRER in a phone interview.

Alterado confirmed that the boat exceeded its passenger capacity.

Organizers of the fluvial parade failed to coordinate with the Coast Guard, according to PCG Commandant Vice Adm. Arthur Gosingan.

He directed the convening of the PCG Special Board of Marine Inquiry to investigate the matter.

War games in Sulu to go on, say Army execs

ZAMBOANGA CITY—DESPITE PROTESTS over the holding of war exercises in Sulu, officials of the US Armed Forces and the Armed Forces of the Philippines were determined to push through with it next month.

US Army Lt. Col. Mark Zimmer, public affairs officer of the Joint Special Operation Task Force Philippines (JSOTFP), told the INQUIRER that about 250 US personnel were expected to arrive in Sulu before the scheduled Balikatan in February.

"Some of them have arrived and doing some assessment, transacting for food and meeting local officials," Zimmer said.

The Balikatan is scheduled to open on Feb. 20, Zimmer said. But Brig. Gen. Benjamin Dolorfino, Southern Command's deputy commander for operation, said the activity will officially start on Feb. 6.

"This Balikatan is purely civil military activity that will last for two weeks," Zimmer said. Dolorfino, on the other hand, said "no war games will be done in this Balikatan, only humanitarian work and this will only last for a month."

American troops, Zimmer said, might stay in Sulu for two months "because packing up equipment entails time."

But Jolo Councilor Temojen Tulawie said the Americans were simply exploiting the word humanitarian mission for their "hidden agenda in Sulu."

Tulawie also expressed fears about the possible abuses and exploitation that US troops might commit on Muslim women, "since not all soldiers are well disciplined, there will be one or two bad eggs in the basket."

But Zimmer said they were overwhelmed with the "warm reception of the people of Sulu and we will not go there if we are not welcomed." Julie S. Alipala, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Sorsogon mayors back 'No-El'

SORSOGON CITY—MAYORS IN Sorsogon will work all-out for a people's initiative and the resetting of the 2007 local elections for 2010, while governors in the region will maintain a wait-and-see attitude on the issue.

Sorsogon Gov. Raul Lee said he and his colleagues would listen first to the proposal of the Union of Local Authorities of the Philippines on Charter change and make their decision based on its merits.

He said the "ticklish" issue must be studied carefully.

"If the proposal will work for the good of the majority and spur progress in the country, then, of course, we will go for it," the Bicol governors' spokesperson said.

"People's initiative is just one of the means to amend our constitution. It requires the direct participation of the people. If there is no other option left and there's really a need to amend the Constitution, then we'll do it."

Asked about the proposal to scrap the 2007 polls, Lee said this would be self-serving and would benefit incumbent officials like them.

This, he said, "is better left to the people's decision and not to us incumbent officials."

But the mayors are taking a more aggressive stance.

Bulusan Mayor Johnny Guysayko, president of the Sorsogon Mayors' League, said the group's national leaders had come up with a position paper favoring the moving of the elections in 2007 to 2010.

The mayors, he said, saw it fit to reset the polls to give way to the change from presidential to parliamentary form of government.

"The cancellation of the elections will allow our national leaders to settle [the affairs of the government] under a new system and be set free from the hangover of an election," Guysayko said.

He said that if the national leaders would order the launching of a people's initiative, they were bound to follow it. Bobby Q. Labalan, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Ati-Atihan Festival security tightened

By Nestor P. Burgos Jr.
PDI Visayas Bureau

KALIBO, AKLAN—WITH NO trace of the tragedy that struck the Ati-Atihan Festival last year, thousands of Aklanons yesterday flocked to the streets to mark the highlight of the yearly event.

Thousands of revelers gyrated to drum-beats and xylophone chimes as they mingled with soot-covered dancers of Ati tribes snaking around the Pastrana Park, the center of the sadsad (street dancing and merrymaking).

Earlier, Kalibo Bishop Jose Romeo Lazo celebrated Mass at the park that was attended by 3,000 devotees. Also present were officials led by Aklan Rep. Florencio Miraflores, Gov. Carlito Marquez and Kalibo Mayor Raymar Rebaldo.

Devotees brought images of the Sto. Niño in various sizes and dressed in colorful robes.

"We hope the celebration will be a religious experience for everyone amid the drum-beatings and revelry," Lazo said in his Homily.

His only reference to last year's killings was when Lazo asked those who attended the Mass to offer a moment of silence for victims of the carnage.

Eight persons were killed and 31 others were wounded when PO1 Jonathan Moreño, a security aide of Supt. Odelardo Magayanes, then Aklan police director, went on a rampage in front of the town police station on Jan. 16, the final day of the festival.

Moreño killed Magayanes, then Kalibo police chief Chief Insp. Manuel Ilejay Jr., SPO1 Juan Gori-on, PO2 Ricky Urquiola, PO1 Devy Tompong and two others.

Moreño was gunned down by fellow policemen.

The tragedy shocked Aklanons who considered it the worst crime to have happened in Kalibo, known to be a peaceful town.

Yesterday, the size of the crowd was the same as in previous years. As the Mass ended, Rebaldo led the traditional shouting of "Viva Señor Sto. Niño!" signaling the start of the merrymaking.

The public plaza erupted with the simultaneous beating of drums as revelers poured into the streets.

Security was, however, tight because of the visit of President Macapagal-Arroyo on Saturday.

Marquez said she was the first president to grace the Ati-Atihan.

"I'd like to thank you all for making this festival bigger and bigger each year, thus earning its distinction as the mother of all festivals in the country," Ms. Arroyo told the revelers on Saturday noon.

The President briefly joined the revelers after witnessing the traditional paepak healing ritual at the St. John the Baptist Cathedral. With a report from Recto I. Vidal, PDI Visayas Bureau

'Hot' logs seized in Pagadian

PAGADIAN CITY—Authorities on Saturday seized at least 6,400 board feet of illegally cut forest lumber in a warehouse here. Officials of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources and agents of the National Bureau of Investigation, acting on a search warrant issued by a local judge, found assorted filches of naturally grown hardwood species in the warehouse owned by Belvenido Claver. DENR Western Mindanao director Ernesto Adobo said more than 1,000 board feet or a truck load of lumber had been moved out of the place the night before the raid.

DTI sees better Mindanao economy

DAVAO CITY—The Department of Trade and Industry in Southern Mindanao foresees an improved economic scenario this year, especially in Mindanao. Merly Cruz, DTI-11 director, said the export sector in the region alone grew to 7-8 percent last year, up from 3-4 percent in 2004. The growth was driven by major export products, such as banana, mango, coconut, seaweeds and wood.

Limited rice subsidy for pupils

COTABATO CITY—President Macapagal-Arroyo's limited rice subsidy program to schoolchildren in depressed provinces has so far benefited only Maguindanao in the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao. The project, aimed at staving off hunger and malnutrition among Grade 1 pupils in poor areas, had been allotted P193 million in funds and would run only until March, said ARMM information chief Samson Gogo. In a statement, Gogo said the free one-kilo rice for each pupil would benefit only Maguindanao and Sulu. The latter province was expected to receive its share this month.

Charlie Señase, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Sharia justice system backed

DAVAO CITY—The European Commission and the Supreme Court has agreed to cooperate to strengthen the sharia justice system in Mindanao. Under the program, a series of seminars and trainings on sharia and Islamic jurisprudence would be conducted. At least four "capacity building" seminars have been conducted and five sharia courts in the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao have been rehabilitated. Secretary Jesus Dureza, presidential peace adviser, said the component was hoped to develop a strong justice system that recognized, promoted and protected the basic rights of internally displaced persons.

Lewd dancing denounced

PUERTO GALERA, Oriental Mindoro—Several visitors and local residents said gay shows featuring dirty dancing in open bars near the beach would adversely affect the image of Puerto Galera. Donald Cañete said the lewd attire and movements of the performers must be regulated so as not to offend other tourists. The Inquirer tried but failed to reach Maximino Carlingal, who represents the bars' association. Mayor Aristote Atienza said his office had been monitoring the gay shows.

people's initiative not later than March 22, 2006 (See "In the Know").

During the caucus, there was also a heated debate on another document, "Option B with Timeline."

The document states that "if elections are approved for May 2007, elected members of parliament (MPs) will assume office on June 30, 2007, and immediately thereafter, the parliament elects the prime minister and the president."

"In the interim, between June 30, 2006, to June 30, 2007, the incumbent President continues to function as both head of state and government who shall organize a government of national unity," it said.

The same document says that the new parliament is expected to be fully in place and functioning by June 30, 2007, or immediately thereafter.

Option B

As the discussion dragged on, the proposal on the election of a president by parliament under Option B was changed.

Ilocos Sur Gov. Chavit Singson stressed the need to allow Ms Arroyo to continue her term until 2010 to dispel accusations that she had cheated in the May 2004 presidential election, as alleged in the Virgilio Garcillano wiretapping controversy.

Surigao del Sur Rep. Prospero Pichay seconded, and presented a motion "to allow GMA to finish her term" to sustain the country's growth and economy.

Cagayan de Oro City Rep. Constantino Jaraula, however, corrected Pichay and suggested that the word "to allow" be stricken out and replaced with "finish her term."

Outgoing Environment Secretary Michael Defensor agreed, saying the motion was a reaffirmation of the party's confidence in the President, who is also its chair.

Ms Arroyo has repeatedly stated that she has a mandate to serve out her term until 2010 but that she would yield to a shortened tenure if this was constitutionally sanctioned.

A statement of consensus released at the close of the caucus said the directorate meeting was concluded on "a high note of confidence, solidarity, teamwork and discipline" and with a firm resolve to establish political stability and sustain economic growth under a united party leadership.

It also said Ms Arroyo, former President Fidel Ramos, chair emeritus, and De Venecia, party president, affirmed their abiding unity and pledged to lead the party as a solid triumvirate.

Victory on 3 fronts

"Collectively and individually, the three leaders expressed their resolve not to allow current political differences to create any rift nor project any image or impression of disunity among them," the statement said.

The party likewise supported Ms Arroyo's call to achieve victory on three fronts—sustaining

IN THE KNOW

FOLLOWING IS THE PROPOSED Lakas-CMD timeline for the shift to a parliamentary system:

March 22, 2006: Approval of seven constitutional amendments by constituent assembly or people's initiative.

April 3: Start of information campaign on constitutional amendments.

June 2: Plebiscite on two questions, to be answered by "Yes" or "No": (1) Do you approve of the amendments? (2) Do you want elections for all elective officials under the parliamentary system in May 2007 (or May 2010)?

June 30: Transformation to interim parliamentary government.

June 2007 or June 2010, depending on final submission and result of plebiscite: Incumbent President winds up functions as head of state and head of the government.

economic gains, effecting Charter change, and fighting poverty to bring the people to a higher level of productivity, sufficiency and dignity.

Ed Malay, Ramos' media consultant, said Ramos would abide by the statement of consensus since he was one of those who drafted it during the caucus.

Two Lakas sources said one of the options that the Arroyo administration could take in order to meet the timeline was for the President to call a special session of Congress during one of the legislative breaks in order to convene it as a constituent assembly.

One source, who asked not to be named because he was involved in the negotiations, said this was discussed in the national directorate meeting by Speaker Jose de Venecia.

The Senate and the House have yet to act on the proposed joint resolution of Congress to convene as a constituent assembly.

Special session

When asked about this, Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez acknowledged that this was "one of the ideas presented, but this needed to be studied."

Lakas Rep. Monico Puentebella said the party should first exhaust all means to get the Senate to join the House in moving to amend the Charter and the calling of a special session should be the last option.

Puentebella said Lakas will hold a caucus today—first among its members in the House and then with its coalition partners to discuss the proposed Charter changes.

Another option that needed to be studied was the people's initiative that local government officials were pursuing in order to hasten Charter change, said Gonzalez.

He said he would be meeting with officials of the Union of Local Authorities of the Philippines to discuss the matter.

was present in the meeting," he noted.

He said that he, House Majority Leader Prospero Nograles and Rep. Prospero Pichay Jr. proposed at the meeting that "the President may also meet with Lakas senators for a meeting of minds."

Sen. Edgardo Angara has already confirmed his attendance, saying the emerging consensus among some senators is to take part in the formation of a new form of government bereft of the gridlock and corruption that characterize the present setup.

But Pichay said the chances that a new Charter would be approved this year were nil. "We can't talk about any timetable. My feet are still on the ground. Without the participation and cooperation of the Senate, we can't talk about Charter change," he said.

Senate Majority Leader Francis Pangilinan said the Senate would not be stampeded into amending the Constitution just because Lakas wanted the amendments.

"The more they try to intimidate the Senate, the more the Senate will resist," Pangilinan said.

Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. said Ms Arroyo would not succeed with her timetable.

Debates to take time

This early, Senator Arroyo predicted that the timeline set by the triumvirate for constitutional change would "not work."

"The Senate, as a matter of legislative procedure, must first debate and decide, before anything else, whether it's amenable to amending or revising the Constitution. That will first go to Gordon's committee on constitutional amendments, where the debate will be extensive and long," he said.

"If it gets past the committee, even more extensive debates on the floor will follow. That will take a long, long time," the senator said.

Other senators also questioned the basis for the interim parliamentary government being cooked up by the administration-dominated House of Representatives, indicating that this would be junked by the upper chamber.

"What will be the basis for that? The 1987 Constitution does not provide for that," Sen. Rodolfo Biazon said wryly yesterday.

Gordon echoed his colleague's view. "You can't have an interim parliamentary government simply because you say it. It will entail constitutional change. But the people are not willing to accept it," he said in an interview.

He said constitutional change would not happen without Senate approval. "The Senate will oppose it because it will not benefit the nation, but only a few."

Rehash of Marcos idea

Pimentel branded the proposal a rehash of Ferdinand Marcos' proposed interim national assembly in the early '70s.

"They're trying a Marcos formula that did not work for us," he said in an interview, recalling that Marcos used as a come-on the lawmakers' automatic membership in the assembly.

Cagayan de Oro Rep. Constantino Jaraula, chair of the House committee on constitutional amendments, had drawn up a "working draft" of a proposed charter that would allow Ms Arroyo to delegate "little by little" her powers to a prime minister during the transition from the presidential to a parliamentary system.

Senator Arroyo said the Senate would not be bound by a House resolution seeking to convene Congress into a constituent assembly.

"The troika's attempt is so patently clear that it's tailor-made to insure their continued stay in power, rather than an honest-to-goodness move to provide an effective constitutional mechanism for good governance," he said.

CHA-CHA TROIKA. President Arroyo is flanked by former President Fidel V. Ramos and Speaker Jose de Venecia during the Lakas-NUCD national directorate meeting in Malacañang.

Three modes

There are three modes for amending the Constitution—a constituent assembly (composed of the members of Congress), constitutional convention (members are elected) and a people's initiative.

In the people's initiative, a petition for amendments requires the signatures of at least 12 percent of the total number of registered voters and at least 3 percent of every district's registered voters.

Gordon's committee starts on Wednesday its hearings on a House resolution seeking to convene Congress into a constituent assembly and a Senate resolution calling for a constitutional convention to study and approve amendments to the Charter.

Gordon cited two options by which the administration could try to get around the Senate's strong opposition to Charter change.

One, the Arroyo administration, through its allies, would push for a bill to implement a people's initiative, which may be approved by a simple majority.

Two, the administration would "create" its own constituent assembly by inviting allies in the House and Senate to attend and pretend they had the three-fourths vote.

Supreme Court

If challenged, the administration would claim that the Constitution did not provide for the two chambers to vote separately, and hope that the Supreme Court would side with it, according to Gordon.

Under a constituent assembly, any amendment to the Constitution must be approved by a three-fourths vote of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, voting separately.

Former Sen. Heherson Alvarez, a member of 1971 Constitutional Convention who attended the Lakas national directorate meeting, said the House could not go it alone because the intent of the Constitution was for two chambers to vote separately.

"The Supreme Court will eventually side with the Senate. The move will be lost," Alvarez said.

Numbers game

In the 24-seat Senate, 18 votes are needed to approve any amendment. Since there are 23 senators at present, only six votes would be needed to reject it.

Senator Arroyo had said that Ms Arroyo and Ramos could get the support of six senators on Charter change, while Gordon said the administration could convince "seven or eight senators at the most" to support the initiative.

Members of the seven-member Senate opposition bloc, led by Pimentel, among others, are expected to vote against Charter change, according to Gordon.

As early as Thursday last week, De Venecia was already declaring that proponents of Charter change were on the "eve of victory."

The Speaker maintained that eight senators, including Pimentel, Angara, Manuel Villar, Juan Ponce Enrile, Manuel "Lito" Lapid and Ralph Recto, would readily support a constituent assembly.

The resolution ostensibly dealt a blow to Ramos' efforts to bring closure to questions on the legitimacy of the Arroyo administration. The issue was prompted by the release last July of wiretapped conversations suggesting Ms Arroyo had manipulated the 2004 presidential election.

Paramount interest

"You know, I have been consistent in saying that whatever I'm doing now is not for my own benefit or ego, neither of any political leader. My paramount interest has always been the country," Ramos said.

"What is important to remember here is that the accelerated timeline for Charter change incorporating seven proposed amendments will be pursued by the party. That is where the unanimity comes in," said the Lakas-CMD chair emeritus.

Ramos did not regard the party decision a personal political setback. "No, these things develop in their own way according to the plays, and inputs and outputs of the other players who were not there," he said.

"Do not forget, the target is the very long range one, it's the national interest under a new system of government. Now all of those that are involved in promoting the system must perform because a new constitution will not solve our problems automatically. Performance is the key," he said.

Ramos described himself as among "the bystanders in the private sector."

"It's not anymore my administration. Mine is done," said Ramos.

Primary objective

An aide close to Ramos said that despite the Lakas-CMD consensus on Ms Arroyo's term, the former general was satisfied that at the very least, constitutional change appeared close to happening.

"I think his primary objective is to have Charter change," the aide, who requested anonymity, said. The source stressed that this had been Ramos' position since his presidency in the 1990s.

The source said Ms Arroyo's term of office remained the "contentious issue" which would be left for Congress to decide.

Ramos expressed satisfaction at the moves to amend the Constitution, noting that this was a far cry from July 8 last year, when Ms Arroyo faced mounting calls for her to resign.

"On July 8, 2005, just six months ago, was there hope for constitutional change at that point? No, very little. Only a few, including myself, were pushing it," Ramos said.

Senate softens?

Ramos noted that another positive development was the scheduling today of a hearing by Senate President Franklin Drilon on the resolution on proposed Charter changes that was passed by the House of Representatives. This measure will be debated by the committee on constitutional amendments.

"The Senate has softened a bit. That will start the debate with public hearings, which is good," Ramos said.

Administration allies who attended Saturday's caucus said the meeting showed Ms Arroyo's support in the party was "solid as a rock."

House Majority Leader Prospero Nograles said Ramos knew that the party had spoken and "he accepted it."

"He is our guru, elder statesman, and he won't break from the party he founded and worked so hard to keep afloat," Nograles said. "He will be our guide in Charter change." With reports from Michael Lim Ubac and Christine O. Avendaño ure to Nita throughout her confinement at San Lazaro.

"If only he told her he was sick, they would not have had another daughter. She was totally clueless about his condition," the priest said.

Leaving in peace

But Father Gennie knows the woman would be leaving in peace.

Long before she lapsed into a coma more than a week ago, Nita had accepted her fate, repeatedly telling the priest: "Father, I have full trust in the Lord."

"I'm really impressed with her," he told the INQUIRER in an interview on Thursday. "Here's a woman who couldn't cling on to anything anymore. She was worrying about her children. She was just counting her days. Yet she could still say, 'I trust in God.'"

The 42-year-old priest met Nita early last year. Part of his job as magistral chaplain of the Order of Malta in the Philippines brought him to the AIDS patients confined at San Lazaro.

Strengthen spirit

He says it's not an easy apostolate even if the group, which traces its roots to medieval Europe, was used to hospital work. Its concern, he says, goes beyond the medical, even if its members include doctors and nurses.

"We saw that it's OK to provide medication, but the patient needs more," he said. "We strengthen their spirit, so with the spirits of our members who help them."

Father Gennie knew what to do when he met Nita one morning in San Lazaro. Already pale and weak owing to regular blood transfusions, the woman was suffering more from abandonment and betrayal.

Rashes

Never did her partner tell her that he was sick, in fact dying of AIDS, the priest recalls Nita telling him in one of his visits. But just when the man thought he had brought his secret to the grave, she saw his death certificate and she was devastated.

That explained the strange rashes and her generally deteriorating condition. The same signs are now all over her daughter, too. She has been taking antiretrovirals. But relatives were told that children, with their still developing immune system, had no real chance of fighting a protracted battle against AIDS.

Except for an aunt, no one among Nita's relatives, not even her aging mother, knows about the tragedy. Father Gennie says she's probably trying to protect them from the social stigma by keeping the burden to herself.

The last time he visited her on Dec. 29, the priest saw an abandoned woman. He was told she was dying and was summoned to give the last sacraments.

She had spent Christmas alone because her aunt had to be with her own family. There was only another male AIDS patient at Pavilion 4.

Favorite carols

Father Gennie made up for the absence by granting what would be Nita's final Christmas wish. A week before Christmas, he dropped by with two Cenacle nuns who sang Nita's favorite carols.

Nita and her daughter's situation is not unusual. At recent seminars on AIDS, experts reported that many more Filipinos like them were dying simply because of their partners' infidelity.

Blind and repentant

A woman in her 30s visited Father Gennie just last week. She had been infected by her husband, also a seafarer. He has gone completely blind and is now a suffering repentant. He is getting unconditional care from the same woman he had cheated on and infected.

Quite fortunately for the couple, none of their three young daughters are sick. Right now, their main concern is to delay the inevitable for their children's sake.

"You can no longer change what is there so we should just maximize the possibilities to do good by forgiving and accepting the suffering in union with Christ," the priest said.

"Parents should see that whatever decision they take would affect not only them but their children, too."

Viet 'pho' soup empire ...

meat, rice noodles, herbs and spices.

On this simple but legendary staple dish, one family is trying to build a culinary empire in the same way Americans turned the humble hamburger into the world's most common fast food.

Launched in June 2003, the Pho24 chain already has 20 restaurants in Vietnam and one in the Indonesian capital Jakarta. Each one cooks between 400 and 500 bowls of pho every day.

The group hopes to open another outlet in Jakarta and expand to Australia, Singapore, Japan, Malaysia and the Philippines this year.

The concept is simple. "A modern restaurant keeping Vietnamese authenticity, with a traditional, delicious and healthy dish," says Ly Qui Trung, general manager and a shareholder in the chain with his mother and four brothers and sisters.

New generation

An elegant and amiable native of the former Saigon with an infectious smile, the 39-year-old Trung typifies a new generation of Vietnamese entrepreneurs.

Like them, Trung left Vietnam to study abroad where he learned the workings of the modern market economy before returning home to use this knowledge and, as Trung stresses, "do something for the success of [the] country."

Trung is never very far from the nationalist pride dormant in almost every Vietnamese.

"I would like the Vietnamese people to be proud of Pho24 and for young people to say: 'Oh, that guy began as a waiter and a receptionist. Now he manages a chain with a presence abroad,'" he says enthusiastically.

The success of his operation is, he says, also a question of culture, in the face of competition from the large American fast-food chains.

Chicken and burgers

In the southern commercial center of Ho Chi Minh City, KFC is already doing well, further fueling Trung's ambition to succeed.

"Otherwise, one day, all the young people will go to KFC or McDonald's," he says, although the golden arches of the burger chain have yet to be seen in Vietnam.

The idea of Pho24 came to him on a plane journey in 2002 when his neighboring passenger, an Australian, told him he was searching for good pho restaurants in Asia.

A WAITER prepares to serve bowls of "pho" to customers at a Pho24 restaurant in downtown Hanoi.

AFP

Four years later, his ambition is to become a tycoon of this traditional soup which is a real calling card for the local cuisine along with spring rolls and green papaya salad. He is even hoping to put the soup business on the stock market within five years.

"I dream of turning Pho24 into a big Asian group," he says. "After Asia, the second stage would be the United States."

Sweet irony

In Vietnam, an efficient businessman needs political acquaintances. Trung knows it. Pho24 is on a list of the 20 brands which will benefit from state aid for training and promotion abroad, via magazines and exhibitions.

Receiving help from a communist government is a pretty irony for this son of Ly Qui Chung, who was information minister for the last government of South Vietnam for three days in April 1975.

At the end of the war, with the whole country having fallen under the iron rule of the northern Communists, Trung's family had to start again from scratch. His mother opened a street canteen with some tables and plastic chairs and his father started working again as a sports journalist.

Fifteen years later, a customer of the hotel where Trung was working as a receptionist helped him leave to study in an Australian university, later completing his course in the United States.

Soup's on

After working as general manager of a hotel on his return, Trung then joined Nam An, the business his family had set up in the meantime. The group today has eight restaurants, cafes and ice-cream parlors in Vietnam and an establishment in Bangkok, to which are added "Pho24," their latest creation.

"We looked for a name easy to remember. Pho24 reflects the 24 ingredients used in this dish and the 24 hours needed to prepare it," explains Trung, who also plans eventually to keep his restaurants open around the clock.

It was necessary to work out a recipe which was acceptable to southern and northern Vietnamese as well as foreigners.

"We wanted a completely new pho, less sweet and with less fat than the southern one, and less salty than the northern one. Every morning, during one year, we did tests," says Trung.

Franchising

As for the decor of the restaurants, Trung says, "It keeps traditional elements as we want customers to feel they are still in a pho store."

Simple decor, a modest space and a standardized cuisine—these are the three pillars of the Pho24 business model.

Of the 20 establishments, half are franchises—Trung wrote and published a book on the concept—but with a 30-percent stake from the head office, which ensures they follow to the letter the principles of the chain.

At the end of 2008, Pho24 hopes to have 97 restaurants in Vietnam, 70 percent as franchises.

Bun 'n' roll

"We want to become one of the main players of quick service restaurants in the country," said Trung.

The entrepreneur is teeming with other ideas.

"A chain of Springrolls24 dedicated to spring rolls and BunCha24 devoted to the traditional dish of noodles and meatballs," Trung says.

He can't stop himself from smiling as he lists the names. He has already registered them as trademarks.

'Pondo' winning war on hunger

By Volt Contreras

A QUICK HUG AND YOU'LL KNOW THAT THE Pondo ng Pinoy feeding program—a project for malnourished children—has been a success.

The kids, who were skin and bones six months ago, have filled out nicely and are lovely to hug.

The program, launched last year with the blessing of Manila Archbishop Gaudencio Rosales, is run by volunteers who have been preparing free meals for the children five days a week for the past six months.

The Our Lady of Mercy Parish in Novaliches, Quezon City is the first of 46 communities in Metro Manila participating in the nutrition drive.

A group of villagers in their 50s and 60s gamely show the INQUIRER how it's done.

Mondays to Fridays, Susie Zipagan and her peers in Barangay Sta. Monica spend at least four hours—from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.—cooking and cleaning up in a makeshift kitchen and then serving meals in a covered court which doubles as a mess hall for some 30 preschool children. The tiny tots who live around the village are all documented malnutrition cases.

"I have a catering business which is doing well," says Zipagan, 60. "But doing this makes me feel complete and happy."

One of many

The free feeding program is actually just one of the many thrusts of Pondo ng Pinoy, the others being education, livelihood and the pursuit of social justice. The Catholic Church launched the fund-raiser on June 12, 2004, urging the faithful to donate even loose change for anti-poverty projects.

The feeding component, dubbed the "Hapag-Asa Integrated Nutrition Program," was launched in July last year.

Under Hapag-Asa, Pondo allots P7.50 per meal per child daily, while the implementing parish is expected to supplement this either in cash or kind (additional food items, cooking utensils, transport, fuel, manpower, etc.)

According to official health surveys cited by Pondo, three out of 10 Filipino children of preschool ages suffer from chronic malnutrition.

"It costs P900 or just P7.50 a day to feed a malnourished child for six months," the program says in its fund-raising brochure.

"This amount is nominal. What can you really buy with P7.50?" notes Levi Buenafe, the Parish Pastoral Council chair of the Our Lady of Mercy.

"What's important is that something beautiful got started. By nature, Filipinos love to pitch in," he says.

Spirit of volunteerism

When the INQUIRER paid a visit last week, it was this spirit of volunteerism that filled the makeshift kitchen run by Zipagan and company—not the simmering pork sinigang.

As the head social service coordinator of the parish, Zipagan reported that her team had never missed a feeding day for the last six months—even during holidays or when classes were suspended because of bad weather.

And unlike other short-lived feeding programs, Pondo had consistently served "heavy meals" unlike other soup-and-bread lines.

Zipagan agreed that the key to keeping up the program on a tireless level was, ironically, the senior age of the volunteers, debunking the common notion that community service projects were best handled by the young.

"I don't think it would have lasted this long if it were run by younger volunteers who have regular jobs or classes to attend. Can you imagine spending almost half of your day here without expecting anything in return?" Zipagan said in Filipino.

Rewards

The good news is, according to a chart furnished by Hapag-Asa project officer Bell Lafuente, the previously underweight children of Barangay Sta. Monica have gained between "2 to 4 kilos" since they started the program in July.

These children comprise the first batch of Hapag-Asa beneficiaries whose "graduation" is set on Jan. 31, according to Lafuente.

This accomplishment, however, goes beyond the kids' health.

Buenafe muses: "We saw a community getting things done. We realized that all we needed was somebody—or something—to provide us the initiative."

CARACOL FESTIVAL

Makati residents danced up a storm yesterday as they celebrated this year's Caracol Festival, the city's version of the Mardi Gras. Participants in a grand parade along Ayala Avenue came in colorful Mother Earth-inspired costumes, all in line with the festival's theme of promoting the importance of preserving the environment.

RODEL ROTON

Search launched for 'Pinoy Barbie'

By Jocelyn R. Uy

THE SEARCH IS ON FOR THE "Pinoy Barbie."

The Muntinlupa City government is promising a cash prize of P25,000 to any Filipino who would be able to come up with the winning design for the first Filipino doll that would reflect the country's rich cultural background.

"Some countries with a very rich cultural heritage have their respective souvenir dolls. The Philippines doesn't have any. It's about time that we have our own," Mayor Jaime Fresnedi told the INQUIRER.

The "Philippine Doll" contest is open to all legitimate Filipino residents who are at least 12 years old.

Participant should submit a dummy or scale model of their entry, at least 18 inches high, together with blue prints and sketches. A participant can submit up to three entries.

Dorm fire tragedy could have been avoided

By Margaux C. Ortiz

THE DEATH OF EIGHT PEOPLE during a dormitory fire in Sampaloc, Manila last week could have been prevented if the firemen only had the right tools, according to the spokesperson of a nationwide group of firefighters.

"We all know that these dormitories are virtual death traps because of the lack of fire escapes and proper ventilation," said Alvin Estrada, spokesperson of the United Firefighters of the Philippines, a nongovernment organization composed of 13,000 firefighters, in an interview with the INQUIRER.

Estrada explained that the firefighters should have been equipped with the necessary tools to break into locked rooms to save trapped victims.

He said the "jaws of life," a hydraulically driven tool, can force open jammed doors in a few minutes, while a portable jackhammer can bore holes in walls to allow firefighters entry.

Turf war heats up

INTELLIGENCE officers of the Makati Police Department (MPD) yesterday arrested a traffic enforcer of the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) after the latter apprehended a motorist at the intersection of Ayala Avenue and Edsa for beating a red light. Eddie Cruz, 42, an MMDA Traffic Operations Center enforcer for the past 10 years, was taken to the MPD headquarters where he underwent questioning. Cruz was the first to be arrested after Makati Mayor Jejomar Binay last week ordered city policemen and public service officers to arrest any MMDA traffic enforcer caught apprehending motorists in his area. The arresting officers said they were still trying to determine what charges to file against Cruz. "If you are arrested, you should immediately be told what charges you are being arrested on... I think it [Binay's arrest order] is a little off, a little unusual. It may be a violation of some rights of individuals and some administrative rules," said MMDA Chair Bayani Fernando. He added that the MMDA would provide legal assistance to Cruz.

Fake underwear seized

THE NATIONAL Bureau of Investigation (NBI) seized 7,095 pieces of fake Nautica underwear worth P1.06 million during simultaneous raids in the cities of Parañaque and Pasay last week. The counterfeit products were taken from warehouses and stalls owned by George Tan and Ruby Torres at the VAS Building Compound and in Stall H-34, Sunnyside Building, both on Taft Avenue Extension in Pasay City; and at 26 Boeing St., Concorde Village, Naia Road, Parañaque City. NBI Intellectual Property Rights Division agent Joseph Furing said trademark infringement and unfair competition charges are now being readied against Tan and Torres.

No tax hike

NO TAX hike will be implemented in Valenzuela

City this year. "The plan to increase the city's tax rates is to be held in abeyance until the economic condition improves," Mayor Sherwin Gatchalian announced recently. Gatchalian said the plan to raise taxes this year, as contained in an ordinance, would be untimely because of the current financial crisis. He added that his constituents were already having a hard time coping with the higher cost of living due to the recent implementation of the expanded value added tax. "The year-long reprieve would give business owners and residents of the city some 'breathing space,'" Gatchalian said.

Taxi driver killed

A TAXI driver was robbed of his earnings and stabbed dead by unidentified assailants who likely posed as passengers before dawn yesterday in Quezon City. Hernani Labong, 47, of Norzagaray, Bulacan, was found dead inside his taxi, with plate number PWT 674, at 1:30 a.m. along Belfast Avenue, Pasong Putik, Fairview. His body was found by barangay watchmen. In his report, PO2 Gregorio Maramag, of the criminal investigation division of the Quezon City Police District, said the motive was likely robbery since Labong's wallet and earnings were missing.

LTO cites QC

SMOKE belchers had better stay out of Quezon City which has received a citation from the Land Transportation Office (LTO) for catching the most number of smoke belchers in 2005. A total of 5,606 transport operators and drivers were apprehended last year by the city's anti-smoke belching unit under the local Environmental Protection and Waste Management Department (EP-WMD). For its accomplishment, the LTO awarded Quezon City a certificate of recognition as the "LTO Law Enforcement Group of the Year." On the other hand, Michael Santos, an enforcer of the city's anti-smoke belching unit, was named "LTO Law Enforcement Officer of the Year" for his "unstinting dedication and unqualified support" for the agency's anti-pollution program.

Barako take 2-0 cushion; Express win

By June Navarro

JAMES PENNY FINISHED A block shy of a triple-double as Red Bull Barako seized a commanding 2-0 lead over Alaska, 80-73, in their best-of-five quarterfinal series in the San Mig Coffee-PBA Fiesta Conference at the Araneta Coliseum.

Penny had 20 points on top of 16 rebounds and nine blocks as he continued to justify his selection as last-minute replacement for the high-scoring Quemont Greer at the start of the series.

In swatting away nine shots, Penny nearly matched the 10 blocks pulled off by Shell's Benjie Paras in a game during the 1991 season.

Yancy De Ocampo pounded the lanes and helped Air21 carve out a 90-87 series equalizer over Talk 'N Text earlier.

"I just wanted to help our team win in any way I can," said De Ocampo, who was shipped by the Phone Pals in the off-season to the Express in exchange for top rookie pick Anthony Washington.

De Ocampo's jumper from the top of the key eased the pressure on the Express after the Phone Pals had come within, 81-83, with two minutes remaining.

Ranidel completed the brothers' act by draining a long tom of his own two possessions later, forcing the Phone Pals to take hurried shots and go into a fouling binge in their race against time.

"We're in top condition," said Air21 coach Bo Perrasol, whose team played four matches in five days. "The key in the next game is our ability to ad-

Harbour Centre pins 4th loss on Magnolia

By Jasmine W. Payo

RAIN OR SHINE TURNED TO ONE OF ITS reserves to claim top spot even as Magnolia absorbed a stunning third straight loss at the end of the elimination round in the PBL Heroes Cup yesterday at the San Andres gym in Manila.

Yousif Aljamal unloaded 11 of his 18 points in the last six minutes of play as the Elasto Painters slipped past the Montaña Jewels, 69-62, to finish with a leading 8-3 win-loss record.

The Wizards, who dominated the tournament before the long holiday break, took a 69-61 defeat at the hands of Harbour Centre and dropped to second at 7-4.

Rain or Shine and Magnolia have already claimed the two outright semifinal slots as early as Saturday.

Harbour Centre ended up tied with Granny Goose and Hapee-PCU at 6-5, but the Goose Masters claimed the third spot and the first twice-to-beat advantage in the quarterfinals due to a superior quotient.

Hapee-PCU and Harbour Centre will battle for the fourth spot and the remaining quarter-

The Montaña Jewels settled for the last quarterfinal seat with a 5-6 card.

The Jewels surged to a 47-40 advantage with Al Magpayo shooting three consecutive treys late in the third period.

Rain on Shine forged the 13th deadlock of the game at 53, before Aljamal took over to put the Elasto Painters ahead the rest of the way.

Gilbert Malabanan also contributed 13 markers for the Painters.

Harbour Centre again turned to former Ateneo star LA Tenorio and Joseph Yeo, who teamed up for 27 points. Fil-Am Rob Reyes also shone with 11 points, 13 rebounds and three blocks.

"Our four-game streak is a good roll going into the quarterfinals," said Harbour Centre coach Jorge Gallent.

Magnolia's Fil-Am standout Kelly Williams sat out the game due to a sprained ankle, while mainstay Arwind Santos went 0-for-6 from the field.

The Portmasters got off to a bristling start behind Tenorio and Reyes for an early double-digit spread, 22-12, in the first period and were never headed after that.

Glorious moment at PSA awards night for all of Team Philippines

By Francis Ochoa

SHE SAT AT THE EDGE OF THE ballroom crowd almost unnoticed. Dressed in a black cocktail dress, and fiddling with her cellular phone, she was a perfect symbol for those who were nearly forgotten Saturday night.

Not that she minded being out of the spotlight.

"It's okay," said 21-year-old Esmeralda Tayag in Filipino. "This night is for the whole team anyway."

"That means it is our night, too."

Tayag was part of the collective group that the Philippine Sportswriters Association named as Athlete of the Year.

That group had many names. But for most of the time since the announcement was made to honor the entire 23rd Southeast Asian Games delegation that brought home the overall title, that group had but one face.

And going into Saturday's coronation night, that face belonged to triple-gold medalist Shiela Mae Perez.

"I feel proud to accept the award in behalf of the entire Team Philippines," Perez said in Filipino. "I felt like crying [on the stage]" and I almost could not talk when I was asked to make an acceptance speech."

Perez herself felt the strain of being Team Philippines' poster girl. "My face feels tired from all the smiling."

There were those who helped in shouldering some of the attention given out Saturday night.

Statuesque karateka Gretchen Malalad cornered her share of the photographers' lenses. New archery sensation Amaya Paz, wushu top bet Rene Catalan and boxer Harry Tañamor were Perez's escorts when the charming diver took the stage with President Macapagal-Arroyo.

But there were also those who sat in the outer fringes of the limelight. Others like Tayag who had to be queried by people wondering who in the world she was before they found out that the Santo Tomas student was the left fielder of the gold-winning women's softball team.

There were those who needed to remind people that they put in the same amount of effort to make sure the country's hosting of the Games would mark the first time it would end up with the overall title of the biennial meet.

time constraints, they were also edited out of a 35-minute speech by Philippine Olympic Committee (POC) president Jose "Peping" Cojuangco.

The speech—part self-serving, part apology, part finger-pointing and part lullaby—praised heavily instead the working committees under Cojuangco.

Again, not that Tayag or any athlete complained.

"I did not hear it," said the Pam-panga-born lass sheepishly.

There were those, however, who noticed.

"It was such a self-serving speech," said the ever-feisty former POC president Crispy Ramos.

"The way the SEA Games were organized, the only reason why the POC officials right now don't have to resign out of delicadeza is because the athletes saved them by winning the overall title," Ramos said. "The least he could have done was dedicate his speech wholly to the athletes."

Luckily, the significance of the night was not lost on those who worked hard to build everything up right to that moment Saturday evening.

"I'm still happy," Tayag said. "All of us who are part of Team Philippines are proud of this moment. This is a once-in-a-lifetime achievement, to be named Athlete of the Year."

When Perez finally raised the Athlete of the Year trophy, from her own obscure corner of the ballroom, the SEA Games first-timer flashed a satisfied smile that belied the affinity she felt with the teammate who shook hands with the Chief Executive, hogged all the attention and was the target of all that bursts of flashbulbs.

Like Tayag said, this was, after all, her night, too.

Pacquiao now 10-8 underdog

By Recah Trinidad

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA—IT'S now Erik Morales who's the odds-on favorite in the the sportsbook windows in Las Vegas, site of his rematch with Filipino boxing icon Manny Pacquiao on Jan. 21.

Pacquiao, 7-5 favorite since the announcement of the second encounter last year, was pegged a 10-8 underdog versus the Mexican hero Morales yesterday.

This means a bet of $125 on Morales would pay $100, said Pacquiao publicist Winchell Campos.

Expect more shifts in the betting trend, advised sportsman Rex "Wakee" Salud, a Pacquiao confidante.

If it were in cockfighting, an P80 bet would pay P100 for Pacquiao, or lo-diyes, Salud said.

Nothing much has been heard from Morales who is winding up a rigid training in the Mexican outskirts.

Pacquiao, meanwhile, continued to train behind closed doors.

All the three Manila scribes here to cover the big rematch, together with Games and Amusements Board (GAB) boxing division head Noli Flores, were disallowed entry to the Wild Card gym of trainer Freddie Roach during Pacquiao's workout yesterday.

The taller Morales rode on guts and superior craft in conquering Pacquiao by unanimous decision in a bloody, dramatic first encounter at the MGM Grand, also in Las Vegas, in March last year.

Majority of experts believe Pacquiao could win only via a knockout, but Roach disagreed and insisted the superbly honed Filipino idol would also go for a win on points.

Roach also confirmed the INQUIRER report that he had ordered changes in Pacquiao's arsenal, thereby correcting serious flaws that cost them the first fight.

"We would be foolish to go only for the knockout knowing Morales has never been stopped before," Roach told the INQUIRER yesterday.

That said, Roach remarked he sees nothing less than a spectacular win for Pacquiao at the Thomas and Mack Center in Las Vegas.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA—MANNY Pacquiao said he had felt pain in his left arm after a heavy workout here but he did not let it hamper his training.

"Masakit, muscle pain, pero OK na lahat (It hurts, but everything's okay now)," he told the INQUIRER after completing his afternoon gym regimen yesterday.

Pacquiao assured everything was fine in his preparation for the second encounter against Erik Morales on Jan. 21.

There were reports Pacquiao had strained his left forearm after it accidentally hit the head of a sparmate.

But Dr. Nasser Cruz, who confirmed the strain, said Pacquiao has recovered phenomenally.

"If it had happened to an older fellow, it would have taken longer to heal," Cruz said. "But Manny is strong, young and takes a lot of supplements."

Pacquiao winds up sparring here Monday morning before motoring to Las Vegas in a convoy in the afternoon.

Handlers said he was expected to complete 130 rounds of sparring in preparation for his tomorrow battle with Morales.

PAGADIAN CITY—THE NORTH Cotabato Braves shocked fancied Tribu Sugbu, 83-76, Saturday to bag the Mayor Sammy Co Invitational basketball crown at the jampacked city gym here.

Michael Etrata and Rey Binas combined for 38 points for the Braves, the team owned by Gov. Manny Piñol's who were competing only for the second time in the Nature's Spring-NBC pre-season series supported by Sulpicio Lines, Spring Cooking Oil, Molten and Prime Channel.

The Tribesmen of Cebu businessmen Lito Gillamac and Mario King were heavily favored to wrap up their third straight title after crushing the Braves, 105-

The Braves came alive in the pay-off period after trailing for 30 minutes, exploding for 26 points while limiting the Tribesmen to 10.

Pistons still humming smoothly

AUBURN HILLS, MICHIGAN—RICHARD HAMILTON SCORED 19 points to lead seven Detroit players in double figures as the Pistons dominated the shorthanded Charlotte Bobcats, 114-91, in National Basketball Association play on Saturday.

Maurice Evans had 18 points and Tayshaun Prince and Antonio McDyess both added 16 points for the Pistons, who took advantage of an injury-riddled Charlotte team to win for the fifth time in six games.

Detroit (29-5) had little difficulty with the Bobcats, who dressed just 10 players due to injuries.

The Pistons' victory came on the back of a big road win over defending champion the San Antonio Spurs on Tuesday, Detroit's first visit there since losing the seventh game of the NBA Finals last season.

Charlotte did not present nearly the challenge that the Spurs did, but the Pistons did not let up, taking a 60-43 lead at the half before cruising to the easy win.

Detroit dressed 12 players and used them all, as coach Flip Saunders emptied his bench and got everybody into the game for at least one minute in the blow-out.

"That was a workmanlike performance coming off a big win," Saunders told reporters after the game. "That's what you like to see."

Chauncey Billups added 13 points for the Pistons while Rasheed Wallace had 12 points and Ben Wallace contributed 10 points and 13 rebounds.

Ben Wallace left the game late in the first quarter after apparently twisting his knee, but returned in the second quarter for the Pistons.

Charlotte (11-26) lost its third straight game and seventh in the past eight during a stretch where the club has had numerous injuries.

In Atlanta, Gilbert Arenas scored 33 points as the Washington Wizards beat the Hawks, 114-106, in overtime.

Joe Johnson scored 23 points and had 11 assists for the Hawks.

In Dallas, Josh Howard scored 29 points as the Mavericks crushed the New Jersey Nets, 110-77.

Jason Kidd scored 19 points for the Nets. In Houston, PJ Brown scored 13 points and had 10 rebounds as the New Orleans Hornets beat the Rockets 86-80.

Juwan Howard scored 22 points and had 10 rebounds for the Rockets.

In San Antonio, Tim Duncan scored 19 points and had 13 rebounds as the Spurs slid by the Memphis Grizzlies, 80-79.

Duncan made a layup off an inbound alley-oop pass from Manu Ginobili with 7.2 seconds left for the game-winner.

Ginobili scored 20 points for the Spurs, who led by 15 points midway through the third quarter before Memphis charged back behind Bobby Jackson and Mike Miller.

Pau Gasol scored 26 points for the Grizzlies. In Los Angeles, Chris Kaman had 25 points and 10 rebounds, leading the Clippers over the Seattle SuperSonics, 98-72.

In Oakland, Kobe Bryant scored 38 points as the Los Angeles Lakers beat the Golden State Warriors, 110-104, despite a triple-double (24 points, 13 assists, 11 rebounds) from Baron Davis.

In Milwaukee, Carmelo Anthony scored 38 points as the Denver Nuggets beat the Bucks, 100-93.

In Chicago, Stephen Jackson scored 21 of his 29 points in the second half and Anthony Johnson's basket with 3.9 seconds remaining sent short-handed Indiana past the Chicago Bulls, 91-89 in Chicago.

In Phoenix, Shawn Marion scored 25 points and had 12 rebounds as the Phoenix Suns beat the Cavaliers, 115-106.

The Suns overcame a 46-point performance by Cleveland's LeBron James for its ninth victory in 11 games.

In Salt Lake City, Dwyane Wade scored 31 points as the Miami Heat beat the Utah Jazz, 100-94.

It's official: James will play for US 5

PHOENIX—NBA STAR LEBRON JAMES COMMITTED to playing for the United States at this year's world championships and the 2008 Olympics.

"It's officially official in his case and I know he's excited about it," said Jerry Colangelo, managing director of USA Basketball. "He's obviously one of the core guys you want because of his talent, his age, his maturity at a very young age."

Colangelo met with James before the Cleveland Cavaliers played the Phoenix Suns on Saturday, but thought the 21-year-old Cavs' star already had committed in a meeting in Chicago on Dec. 22. However, James was quoted as saying he still had to talk to Colangelo before making any commitment.

He was part of the US team that struggled to win a bronze medal at the Athens Olympics in 2004, but saw limited playing time for coach Larry Brown's team. He played in eight games, averaging 5.4 points and 11.4 minutes per contest.

Meanwhile, The United States will face Puerto Rico in its first game of the basketball world championships after Sunday's draw.

The United States, the tournament's top-seeded team, was drawn in Group D along with Puerto Rico, Slovenia, Italy, China and Senegal. Its opening game on Aug. 19 in Sapporo will be a rematch of its 92-73 loss to Puerto Rico at the Athens Olympics.

Defending champion Serbia-Montenegro, formerly Yugoslavia, has a record five world titles and is in Group A with Athens Olympic gold medalists Argentina, Venezuela, France, Lebanon and Nigeria.

The 2006 FIBA Men's World Championship will be held Aug. 19-Sept. 3 in Japan. AP

Toms collars share of Sony Open lead

HONOLULU—DAVID TOMS SET A COURSE record with a 9-under 61 and it still wasn't enough to take the lead in the Sony Open, which turned into a two-man race between Toms and the equally hot Chad Campbell on Saturday.

Toms caught Campbell with a two-putt birdie on the 18th, setting the tournament record at Waialae Country Club since it changed to a par 70 in 1999. Davis Love III still has the course record of 12-under 60 in 1994.

"I was just trying to keep up," Toms said. "I made a couple of putts I wasn't supposed to make, but that's what you do when you have a hot round."

Campbell did his heavy lifting with the irons, rarely leaving himself birdie putts outside 15 feet and converting enough of them for a 62. He had a 15-foot birdie putt to match Toms' record score on the final hole, but it hung on the lip.

They were at 14-under 196, seven shots clear of anyone else.

Big-hitting Bubba Watson, who hit a wedge into the par-5 18th for a birdie and a 66, and Shane Bertsch (63) were tied for third at 7-under 203. Jim Furyk, tied with Campbell starting the third round, had a 70 that left him in the group at 204 with Rory Sabbatini and Charles Warren.

Waialae was missing some energy with 16-year-old Michelle Wie home writing a school paper instead of testing herself on the US PGA Tour. Not even one-fourth of the gallery that watched her for two days were with the final threesome, although the golf was superb.

A gentle breeze allowed for better scoring, but no one took advantage like Toms and Campbell.

Defending champion Vijay Singh went out in 30 to pull within one shot of the lead, but he managed only two birdies and two bogeys on the back nine for a 65, and wound up losing ground. AP

Bronco Champ helps end Patriots reign

DENVER—CHAMP BAILEY INTERCEPTED a Tom Brady pass in the end-zone and returned it 100 yards to break open a tight defensive battle in helping the Denver Broncos register a 27-13 victory over the New England Patriots on Saturday.

The two-time defending Super Bowl champion Patriots had little answer to Denver's marauding defense and were punished for a series of fumbles and interceptions that allowed the home team to ease to victory in the AFC divisional showdown.

Winning their first playoff game since 1998 when John Elway led the Broncos to a Super Bowl victory, Denver took advantage of five New England turnovers, snapping the Patriots' NFL-record 10 straight post-season wins.

On finally winning a postseason game without Elway, Denver head coach Mike Shanahan said: "John Elway was a great player and I think he will be the first to tell you that it takes a complete team."

Bailey's interception came as the Patriots were trailing 10-6 but driving deep in Denver territory late in the third quarter. Reuters

Fashion, sporting worlds fuse at Australian Open

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA—The white ball has virtually vanished from tennis, but it made a comeback Sunday as the sports and fashion worlds met instead of clashing.

Rising Russian star Maria Kirilenko made her debut as tennis' face for designer Stella McCartney in a new line of clothes and shoes specially designed for the No. 25 seed. Fashion tie-ups are on the rise in tennis, with Serena Williams already well-known for dabbling in her own designs.

The scene was a special tennis court set up at the Grand Hyatt Hotel. The surface was plush carpet in "dusty rose"—the same color as Kirilenko's dress, which looked like a loose tank above a layered, pleated skirt. Underneath were a fluorescent orange tank top and shorts. The materials are designed to help keep athletes cool.

Bright green tennis balls would have clearly clashed, so the event organizers found some white balls that complemented the color scheme.

"I can bring together two things that are very important to me, my sport and my style," Kirilenko said. "It's the best technology. In addition, it looks great."

McCartney couldn't make it to the tournament because of a prior commitment, but sent Kirilenko a telegram of support.

"Now, get out there and kick ass!" McCartney wrote. AP

HINGIS: No longer a fearless rookie AP

Hingis feels the butterflies fluttering

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA—FORMER world No. 1 Martina Hingis picked a tough time to make her comeback to Grand Slam tennis.

For only the second time in 30 years, all of the women's top 10 are featured in the main draw at the Australian Open.

The list goes on. There's 20 of the top 20 here and 46 of the top 50; there's eight women who've held the No. 1 ranking and five former Australian Open winners in the field.

Hingis, who spent 209 weeks at No. 1 in five stints, retired in 2002 because of long-term foot and heel problems.

Despite winning three and losing three Australian Open finals over a six-year span from 1997, the 25-year-old Swiss star is a rank outsider at Melbourne Park because of the power evolution in women's tennis.

She doesn't even have a ranking. "It feels different definitely from coming here playing in '95 when I was 15, (as a) fearless rookie," she said Sunday. "Ten years later, definitely you have some butterflies in your stomach."

Hingis returned to WTA tournament play at the Gold Coast earlier this month, winning three matches before a semifinals defeat to Italian Flavia Pennetta.

At Sydney last week, she lost to No. 8-ranked Justin Henin-Hardenne, the reigning French Open and 2004 Australian Open champion.

"I don't think it was too bad to lose to the eventual champion," Hingis said. "Playing (Henin-Hardenne) definitely showed me what it's all about now, being a Top 10 player and winning Slams."

Big serves and ground strokes have become the norm in women's tennis since Venus and Serena Williams led the vanguard of heavy hitters.

Hingis relied on touch, anticipation and guile. Henin-Hardenne, who is about the same size as Hingis, has developed a game that helps her combat the heavy hitters.

"She hits it very fast and deep," said Hingis. "That's the difference in today's game. (Players) are more relentless. From the beginning to the end, you have to be 100 percent focused."

Though Hingis still hopes to use some of her old tricks.

"I never could overpower other players, but I hope I can find other winning strategies," she said. AP

AMONG the new batch of faces Hingis will have to contend with is Russian superstar Maria Sharapova. REUTERS

Hidayat sees RP Open raising Filipinos' play

INDONESIA'S REIGNING OLYMPIC AND WORLD CHAMPION Taufik Hidayat is keen on seeing action in the first Philippine Open Badminton Championships, saying the event will further raise the level of play here to world-class caliber.

"From what I've seen, the physique of Filipinos is identical to most of the world champions whom I have played with," said Hidayat. "The only element needed for major success by Filipino players is more international competitions."

The Indon ace, the first player to win both the Olympic and world singles crown, leads the foreign challenge in the upcoming Philippine Open slated March 1-5 at the PhilSports Arena in Pasig City.

Britain's Nathan Robertson and Gail Emms, men's world No. 1 Lin Dan, Pi Hongyan of France and Mia Audina Tjptawan of the Netherlands—who all saw action in the MVP Cup here last year here—are also expected to vie for honors.

Hidayat was actually scheduled to grace the launch of the $120,000 event last week, being its chief endorser, but he begged off after sustaining an injury.

The International Badminton Federation has categorized the RP Open, sponsored by Bingo Bonanza, as a four-star tournament—which gives local players the chance to shoot for world-ranking points.

Organized by IMG and backed by JVC, the event is expected to lure over 200 players from 25 countries since it will also serve as a tune-up for those competing in the China Masters, a six-star tournament slated the week after the RP Open.

Other backers are INQUIRER Badminton, The Philippine Star, Badminton Asia, Solar Sports, Jam 88.3, 99.5 RT, Magic 89.9, 103.5 K-Lite, Wave 89.1, Snickers, Toby's Sports, Fossil Watches, Bacchus, Yonex Sunrise and Crowne Plaza, the official hotel.

Xavier forges 3-way tie for Hitachi lead

GAMES WEDNESDAY (UNO gym)
5:30 p.m.—Xavier vs. St. Stephen
7 p.m.—GCHS vs. Hope Christian

LAST YEAR'S RUNNER-UP XAVIER School hardly worked up a sweat in crushing Hope Christian High School, 95-49, for its second straight win in the Metro Manila Tiong Lian Basketball Association (MMLTBA)-Hitachi Cup basketball tournament at the UNO gym in Sta. Cruz, Manila.

Philip Ong finished with 15 points to lead a balanced scoring attack by Xavier, which forged a three-way tie for first place with idle UNO High and St. Jude Catholic School. Three other players—Wesley Contreras, John Woodward Co and Charles Tiu—also scored in double figures for Xavier, which is being handled by coach Patrick Aquino and manager Caesar Wongchuking.

Contreras contributed 12, Co added 11 and Tiu had 10 for Xavier, which lost to St. Stephen in the best-of-three title showdown last year.

St. Jude defeated Grace Christian High School, 66-49, to join UNO and Xavier in the lead in this seven-team tournament also supported by Accel, Davies Paints, Burlington, Converse and Helathy Options.

Edison Chua, Carl Cua and Rankin Cailles combined for 46 points for St. Jude, which beat Hope, 69-49, in its first game.

Training in earnest for the Doha Asiad

DESPITE THEIR RESOUNDING VICTORY in the 23rd Southeast Asian Games last month, the resurrected Filipino athletes will not rest on their laurel but will train in earnest for this year's Asian Games in Doha, Qatar, from Dec. 1 to 15.

In an interview with the INQUIRER's Musong Castillo, Philippine Olympic Committee president Jose "Peping" Cojuangco said, "The POC is not putting premium on the gold medal winners of the SEA Games last month, but it will be asking all NSAs (national sports association) to evaluate the performance of their athletes for the coming Asiad and submit their respective recommendations before the POC General Assembly meeting, the first for this year, on Jan. 25."

Added Cojuangco: "The Asian Games is a bigger tournament, so we need to send only the best." I agree.

The Asian Games are no longer a venue where the athletes will be taking part to gain the needed international exposure; it is a sporting meet for honest-to-

CLEAN LIVING

goodness competitions where POC and PSC (Philippine Sports Commission) officials are duty-bound to field only the best and brightest in order not to embarrass the country before the eyes of the world. Filipino taxpayers are more conscious now about the medals our athletes would be winning since public funds (their money in particular) would be spent for these games. The people want results, not promises, from sports officials whose upkeep they are paying for.

In the last Asian Games held in Busan, Korea, in 2002, the Philippines won three gold medals—the men's 9-ball doubles in billiards by Francisco "Django" Bustamante and Antonio Lining, the men's doubles in bowling by World Cup Hall of Famer Paeng Nepomuceno and RJ Bautista and the equestrian show jumping by Mikee Cojuangco-Jaworski, who was later voted PSA Athlete of the Year 2002.

Four years earlier, in the 1998 Asiad in Bangkok, the Philippines landed a disgraceful 21st in the overall standings by winning only one gold, courtesy of the 15-ball billiards doubles team of Gande Valle and Romeo Villanueva. In that Bangkok bash, many of the Philippines' Southeast Asian neighbors overtook the Filipinos' cream of the crop, to wit: Thailand, relying on its hometown advantage, bagged 24 gold medals; Indonesia, a perennial SEA Games overall champion, won six golds, Malaysia five, and, would you believe, unheralded Sri Lanka three and Singapore and Myanmar two golds each. The Philippines wound up with 1 gold, 5 silver and 12 bronze medals, narrowly beating Vietnam by one bronze.

Over the years, the Philippines made little progress in the Asiad and, more importantly, the Olympic Games. "We have been humiliated too long," said a longtime sports fan who, like many others, is more sensitive now to the country's floundering performance. "It's time we wake up."

Retracing history, the Philippines attained monumental achievements in the old version of the Asiad, the Far Eastern Games, from 1913 until 1934.

But after the Pacific War, the country's athletic program dipped dramatically. By the 1950s, the Filipino athletes had fallen on hard times. The Philippines made its biggest impact in the Asiad in 1954 when Manila hosted the meet's second edition, winning 14 gold medals, the most by any RP team in four decades. However, the country's performance dipped in succeeding Asiards starting in 1958 in Tokyo where RP won nine gold medals and in 1962 in Jakarta where we won seven.

How will the Philippines fare in the Doha Games? Will it win five, six, seven or more gold medals? Just where it is headed, only time will tell.

PCU junior five closes in on wild card berth

PHILIPPINE CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY DISPOSED off two NCAA Final Four rivals in as many days at the Rizal Coliseum and appeared set to secure the lone high school wild card at stake in the National Students basketball championship.

PCU whipped San Beda College, 62-39, last Saturday then came back the next day to turn back a taller Jose Rizal University, 73-63.

As the only undefeated squad in the double round eliminations, PCU now has the luxury of the twice-to-beat privilege in the finals set Saturday at the Ninoy Aquino stadium starting at 8 a.m.

In other matches, SBC recovered with an easy 73-61 decision over Far Eastern University, which earlier prevailed over Don Bosco of Mandaluyong, 54-37. PCU-Dasma scored twice against lightweights, 86-43, over Nemei and 62-54 over University of Santo Tomas.

The wild-card winner advances to the 12-team tournament proper starting on Feb. 17 that also features as many squads in the collegiate division starring the champions of the NCAA, UAAP, Cusaa and regional eliminations. The women's side will showcase teams from the WNCAA and the WBL.

In its show of support to the organizing Philippine Basketball Federation, the NCAA management committee, through acting chair Bernie Atienza, had released a resolution waiving the rule on residency that would have credited the NSBC appearance as one playing year to their cagers.

"We fully appreciate this act of the NCAA and we are keeping our fingers crossed that the UAAP will look at this issue from the same perspective," PBF president Moring Martelino said.

The PBF is slated to meet again on Thursday to decide the format and schedule of the wild card play for the collegiate division.

That's not what Annabel said

By Nini Valera

RICHARD GUTIERREZ has announced that he is renewing his contract with Regal Entertainment, in spite of an earlier statement to the contrary given by his mother, Annabel Rama.

Speaking during the press con for his latest movie with Angel Locsin, the actor, who has an eight-picture deal with Regal, said, "I am focused on my work. I let other people handle the problems."

Gutierrez's starrer, "Mulawin The Movie" failed to win a single award from the recently concluded Metro Manila Film Festival and Rama has accused Regal matriarch Lily Monteverde of manipulating the results. Rama went on nationwide television to say that her son would not even finish his sixth film under the existing contract.

But now, shooting for the movie, "I Will Always Love You"—co-produced by GMA Films, just as "Mulawin The Movie" was—is about to wrap up.

GUTIERREZ and Locsin in their new movie

Before the press conference, Monteverde read a prepared speech pleading with the movie press to limit their questions to the movie and not ask about the current controversies involving its lead stars.

"Spare Angel and Richard from becoming further victims of the circumstances (sic)," the producer said. "Please let this love team bloom."

In a one-on-one interview with INQUIRER Entertainment after the press con, Gutierrez discussed his feelings about "Mulawin The Movie."

I will join if ...

ACCLAIMED director Joel Lamangan wants changes made in the organization of the Metro Manila Film Festival—or he's not participating in the next one.

Speaking at the weekly Kapihan sa Sulo in Quezon City, Lamangan reiterated his earlier call for young industry leaders to take over the MMFF.

"Until now, people like Attorney (Espiridon) Laxa run the show," the director said. "I call them dinosaurs."

Lamangan clarified that he was not upset because another entry, "Kutob," won the Cultural Award or because filmmaker Jose Javier won Best Director.

"I'm protesting because there is no clear standard [for the selection]," Lamangan said. Norman Bordadora

It's a tie

LOS ANGELES—The writers of "Syriana" and "Capote" will face a run-off vote after tying for the USC Scriptor Award for Best Adaptation of a Book or Short Story to Film.

The two movies beat out finalists "Brokeback Mountain," "The Constant Gardener" and "A History of Violence."

Another round of selection committee balloting will determine a single winner and results will be announced Jan. 18.

"Capote," based on the biography of writer Truman Capote by Gerald Clarke, was written by Dan Futterman. "Syriana," a drama about oil and politics, was based in part on the book "See No Evil" by former CIA agent Robert Baer and was scripted by Academy Award-winning writer Stephen Gaghan, who also directed.

Past winners include "Million Dollar Baby," "Mystic River," "Seabiscuit" and "Wonder Boys."

SYDNEY—Paparazzi armed with water pistols attacked Australian actor Heath Ledger at the Sydney premiere of his new movie "Brokeback Mountain," saying it was payback for his previous bad manners.

The rebel photographers said the unprovoked drenching of Ledger and his co-star and partner Michelle Williams on Friday was a "joke protest" to teach the Hollywood heart-throb to be more polite to them in the future.

Photographer Peter Carrette told Saturday's Daily Telegraph the stunt was designed to encourage Ledger "not to abuse" the press.

"He keeps spitting at us and kicking in car doors," Carrette told the paper. AFP

PICACHE, as a lesbian in "Kaleido," has been receiving good notices.

No complaints

But Cherrie Pie Picache, Best Supporting Actress, has one wish for the MMFF

By Bayani San Diego Jr.

CHERRIE PIE PICACHE SHOULD HAVE BEEN celebrating her Best Supporting Actress win at the recently concluded Metro Manila Film Festival. Instead she was agitated, unable to hide her disappointment when she sat down with INQUIRER Entertainment.

She said she was saddened by the controversies surrounding the MMFF—particularly, the snide remarks on her inclusion in the Best Supporting Actress category, when her "Ako Legal Wife" co-stars Zsazsa Padilla and Rufa Mae Quinto had competed for Best Actress (Padilla won).

Picache recalled that, upon arrival at the Aliw Theater on awards night, she had been besieged by reporters. "They were all asking why. How was I supposed to answer them?"

When she went onstage to claim her trophy, she considered tackling the issue in her acceptance speech, but decided against it, certain she would sound "as if I were sour-graping."

If you ask her now, she'd rather grouse about the festival's failure to "showcase the best of Filipino films and tap new directors."

She said she couldn't understand why another film of hers submitted as an entry, Brillante Mendoza's "Kaleido," had been shut out. Mendoza is the same independent director behind "Masahista," which won the video prize at the Locarno International Film Festival.

NO/A2-4

MMFF grosses analyzed

THE 2005 METRO FILM FEST'S gross receipts are in, and "Enteng Kabisote, 2" tops the list with a whopping P108M, or almost one third of the festival's total take of around P350M.

"Enteng's" spectacular showing is significant because its special effects aren't as good—or expensive—as those in the film fest's two other big fantasy productions, "Exodus" and "Mulawin."

Clearly, other factors were working for the film to make it a crowd favorite. Logically, they would include the popularity of Vic Sotto's signature title character, who has become almost like a number of the viewing family due to his long run on television, via Sotto's sitcom.

This is an instructive point, because it proves that high-tech flourishes are still no match for good, old-fashioned, down-home "friendship" between stars and viewers.

"Enteng" also scores with the warm "family" feelings elicited by the loving and supportive members of the Kabisote household. They may bicker and fight, but when push comes to shove, they instantly get their family act together.

And, quite uniquely, this "real" family is counterpointed by the "fantasy" family of fairies Enteng has inadvertently married into.

It's this link between the two very different families living in parallel dimensions that makes the "Enteng" TV-film franchise especially entertaining for Filipino viewers.

In second place is "Exodus" and the film deserves its popularity because its special effects are particularly lovely.

The big disappointment is "Mulawin," which ended up only in third place. We thought that the fact that it, too, is a film based on a popular TV series would interest many moviegoers in the big-screen version. Well, so much for prognostication.

To be sure, some people involved in the production complain that it didn't get the movie houses it deserved—which if true, could have lowered its total gross.

Among the non-fantasy productions, the movie that did best at the box office was a comedy, "Ako Legal Wife." Its total take, P49M, was only a bit less than "Mulawin's" P55M, despite the huge disparity in their budgets.

'Sometimes good reviews are better than awards'

"It's a pity," Picache sighed. "The MMFF could educate audiences about good filmmaking and proper awards-giving—for example, the right way of categorizing performances. Instead we are mired in scandal. We failed to maximize the festival's potential."

Even so, she didn't agree with critics calling for the MMFF's abolition.

"Such a move would benefit only Hollywood films," she asserted. "The holiday season is the only time when local movies are assured of doing well at the tills."

Her hope for the next MMFF: "The rules should be clear and everyone should observe them. The festival should be run by independent-minded people who understand filmmaking and have the well-being of the industry as priority. We need people who have no hidden agenda, to prevent conflicts of interests."

Although disillusioned by the goings-on in the mainstream industry, she's "very excited" about her foray into independent cinema.

"Kaleido," graded B by the Cinema Evaluation Board, will open in theaters on March 8.

"It's inspiring to watch them work," she said of the "Kaleido" team.

For her role as a lesbian, she has received raves from the most discerning critics.

"Sometimes good reviews are better than awards," she said, smiling, "especially if they come from people I respect deeply and the praise is shared by my co-workers."

That's not ...

"I never expected to win awards for it [although] I did my best," he said. "[But] even without awards, I'm very pleased with the movie."

As for "I Will Always Love You," directed by Mac Alejandre, Gutierrez described it as a mature take on young love.

"We've grown older, Angel and I, and I feel that the story depicts that maturity in us."

Very likely part of his maturing was the move last month to his own condominium unit at The Fort.

"I don't have a maid," he said. "I do everything. Since it's new, my tendency is to keep things in order. I always eat out, though."

He said he invited his twin, Raymond, to move in with him, but that Raymond declined.

What is it like being Richard Gutierrez, matinee idol—and son of Annabel Rama?

With a grin and a twinkle in his eye, the actor said, "Difficult."

Stocks seen to rise

STOCKS continued to rally last week, touching a 10-month high, on easing fiscal concerns and lower interest rates, analysts said.

Grace Cerdania of online brokerage 2TradeAsia.com said the key catalyst that has been aiding sentiment was the government's fiscal-balancing story and the resulting stable interest rate outlook.

She said trends from the Bureau of Treasury's auctions have supported this thought, after the Treasury rejected high bids for the 90-day tenor last week.

"Also, local monetary authorities maintained benchmark interest rates steady, driven by stable trend expectation in consumer prices. While the peso's strength has partly aided the picture, stabilization within P52.40 to P52.70 may ensue, unless significant shifts occur," she said.

Move seen to decongest Ortigas-Shaw

By Doris C. Dumlaog

THE GOVERNMENT HAS RECEIVED an unsolicited build-operate-transfer proposal for a $918.6-million mass railway transit project, tagged as the MRT Line 8, that aims to link Metro Manila with the booming province of Rizal.

Documents from the National Economic and Development Authority showed that the MRT-8 project was offered by American Transport Systems Corp. to decongest the Ortigas/Shaw corridor by cutting across Angono, Taytay and Cainta and connecting with MRT Line 2 and Line 3.

The project consists of a 16.856-kilometer elevated dual-track guideway from Sta. Mesa, Manila, to Taytay and a 3.263-km at-grade (a junction at which two or more transport routes cross at the same level) section from Taytay to Angono.

It will have provision for further extension up to Sta. Cruz, Laguna, and passenger connections to the existing rail systems in Metro Manila, specifically the Shaw Blvd. Station of MRT-3 on EDSA, and the Araneta station of LRT Line 2 along Aurora Blvd.

The project was laid on the table as early as 2004 but has yet to receive even a first-pass approval from the government's inter-agency Investment Coordination Committee. But the project had drawn support from the local government units of Rizal itself as well as the Department of Transportation and Communication.

Budget Secretary Romulo Neri, who used to head the NEDA, said: "It's a good proposal. Rizal has 2,000 hectares (of idle property) it wants to develop, so it's good."

Neri said these MRT systems in the pipeline would be more viable if the proponents included some real estate development component.

RP requesting $535M in Japanese ODA this year

By Michelle V. Remo

THE PHILIPPINES WILL SEEK SOME $535 million worth of loans from the Japanese government to support the Arroyo administration's infrastructure and environmental development agenda for 2006.

Finance Undersecretary Roberto Tan, in charge of the government's foreign borrowings, told reporters that the loans would finance three projects, namely the Cebu South Coastal Road, the Infrastructure Logistics Assistance Facility, and the Environmental Development Project.

These are part of the shortlist of items that the Philippine government will present to the Japan Bank for International Cooperation (JBIC) for funding under the 27th Yen Loan Package.

Tan said Japanese representatives were set to arrive in Manila in the next few days to discuss and decide on the components of the loan package. Every year, JBIC prepares a package of official development assistance for beneficiary countries like the Philippines.

The Cebu South Coastal Road, one of the government's targeted infrastructure developments, is estimated to cost $42 million. The project proponent is the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH), which has already confirmed that the estimated loan amount could be covered by its future budget.

Credit facilities are being sought for the two other projects, with the loans to be sourced through the state-owned Development Bank of the Philippines for relending to private or public sector entities that will

Oil prices on the rise, DOE says

By Abigail L. Ho

MOTORISTS MAY NO LONGER ENJOY FUEL price rollbacks in the coming weeks as world oil prices have again started to escalate.

Zenaida Monsada, director of the Department of Energy's oil industry management bureau, said the best that motorists could expect was for fuel prices to remain at existing levels.

The possibility of a rollback at this time was very slim, she said. There was even a big chance of a price hike.

"Prices in the world market have really gone up. There's hardly any chance of a rollback," she said in a telephone interview.

According to data from the DOE, the regional benchmark Dubai crude had soared to a January average of $56.86 a barrel from the December average of $53.20 a barrel.

The price of unleaded gasoline based on the Mean of Platts Singapore (MOPS) benchmark for refined petroleum products also surged to $66.64 in the first 12 days of January, climbing by more than $5 from $61.01 a barrel last month.

MOPS-based diesel shot up to an average of $71.99 a barrel in the Jan. 1-12 period from only $67.03 a barrel in December.

Despite rising international prices, Consumer and Oil Price Watch chair Raul Concepcion said motorists could actually expect more stable fuel prices this year compared with the last two years.

In an earlier interview, he said factors that would contribute to the stability in prices include the decision of the United States and other big oil users to more aggressively tap alternative energy sources, including nuclear, coal-to-gasoline and ethanol.

He also said Russia was expected to pump and refine more oil to address global demand.

As of Jan. 4, premium unleaded gasoline retails at between P35.65 and P36.90 a liter, diesel at between P29.40 and P33.15 a liter, and kerosene at between P32.15 and P35.30 a liter.

RP policies failed, economics guru says

By Ronnel W. Domingo

POLICIES THAT DEVELOPING COUNTRIES like the Philippines adopted in the past decades have failed to deliver because economic principles were not applied, according to a New York-based expert.

William Easterly, an economics professor at the New York University, said in his book, "The Elusive Quest for Growth: Economists' Adventures and Misadventures in the Tropics," that governments could "kill (economic) growth" through inflation, high taxes, supply-side regulations and controls and trade and investment restrictions. Easterly, who is visiting the country for lectures this week, argues that a politically regulated and manipulated economy leads to an environment of corruption that defeats efforts toward development.

Silverio snarl

COCKTALES

Victor C. Agustin

CHEMPHIL CEO ANTONIO M. GARCIA has been snarled in the worsening feud between Bulacan Mayor/Sharp electronics partner Ricardo Silverio Sr. and his polo-playing son, Ricardo Jr.

Garcia, a former polo player himself, was named as a "co-conspirator" of Ricardo Jr. when the latter took over the Silverio Urdaneta Village residence while the patriarch and his second wife, Bulacan Rep. Lorna Silverio, were abroad.

Garcia had forwarded a text to a cellular phone number formerly used by the son, apparently not knowing that the unit, owned by a Silverio company, has now reverted to the patriarch after the son was removed from the family company.

The Garcia text was apparently a copy of the text he had sent to LBC Bank owner Carlos "Linggo" Araneta, wherein Garcia claimed that the house on 21 Cruzadas St. belonged to a family corporation "of which Carding (the patriarch's nickname) does not own a single share."

"... (I) in the end Ricky (the son) as the controlling SH (shareholder) n administrator will prevail," the Garcia text continued. "When all is settled will tell Ricky to reoffer the property to u," Garcia said, before signing off, "best rgds. tony"

Apparently unknown to Garcia, Araneta had counterchecked with Silverio Sr. the provenance of the Urdaneta house and that Araneta, unlike his cousin Marcos son-in-law Greggory Araneta who provided the security detail for the surreptitious takeover, was, in the words of Silverio Sr., "an innocent party."

Accompanied by his wife Dana and two children, the 57-year-old Silverio Jr. "simply rang the doorbell" of the Urdaneta house he grew up in and was allowed entry by their longtime maid, said Silverio Jr. friend Edvee Cruz, bellying the armed takeover claim.

The hostage-taking claim—the three maids in the Urdaneta house were allegedly prevented from leaving thereafter—was a ploy, Cruz added, to get a Makati SWAT team to rush into the disputed house and eventually eject Silverio Jr. and the 10-security guards provided by Greggory Araneta.

Cruz and former Makati councilor Bong Daza, who accompanied Silverio Jr. during the takeover, were also included in the usurpation of property and two other complaints filed by the patriarch. According to Cruz, Silverio Jr. resented the fact that the house built by his departed mother has now been taken over by his step-mother, who used to be his father's secretary, while his father, being the San Rafael mayor, stays in Bulacan.

"A lot of these MRT/LRT projects are able to recover the cost if you know how to do the real estate play. In other words, the developer also does housing, building, commercial and shopping centers," Neri said.

"Like what they're doing with MRT-7 (Edsa-Bulacan), they're sharing the profit with the government, because as you bring mass transport there, land values rise and if you're able to capture the opportunities, (the need for) government subsidy will be lower," he explained. (See related

The MRT-8 East Rail project involves the procurement of 28 wide body three-car trains with a capacity of 1,005 passengers each.

Of the total project cost, 71 percent was intended to be the build-transfer component and the remaining 29 percent, the build-operate-transfer component.

Under government regulations, unsolicited BOT proposals are subject to a Swiss challenge or should be bid out to other interested investors but the original proponent has the right to improve its offer to match that of the winning bidder.

cant dollar-based investments flow into key sectors," Cerdenia wrote in her weekly report.

Week-on-week, the benchmark index rose 14 points or 0.6 percent to 2,148.27.

AB Capital Securities wrote in a weekly report that the index was on the verge of trying to break the 2,172 resistance mark before political scandals again erupted.

"This should be a good indication that investors are slowly discounting the political distractions that occurred last year, and giving more emphasis on economic and financial concerns," AB Capital said.

News of mergers also bolstered shares of Banco de Oro, which touched an all time high of P38 a share. BDO has offered to merge with third largest Equitable PCI Bank, which also hit a 5-year high.

But AB Capital warned that a thorn in the market's side was the risk of higher oil prices.

"In fact, oil players are contemplating to raise pump prices anew as crude oil prices reached a 3-month high of $64.80 (last Friday). Since the Bangko Sentral's decision to raise rates last October, crude oil prices jumped 6 percent on concerns of winter temperatures in the US Northeast (largest heating oil market), declining crude stocks (build-up offset by higher projected 2.9 million barrels drawdown last week), and mild tensions in the Middle East," AB Capital wrote. Can LGUs do it better?

AMID ALL THE shortcomings, issues and problems with the national government and national government officials that we all like to attribute our country's troubles to, it is now not uncommon for people (including yours truly) to look to local governments as our hope. Such faith is inspired by the ever-growing number of "islands of excellence" in the management of development from the units of governance closest to the people. But unlike those of us who would prefer to further empower local government units (LGUs) to be the primary drivers of our development efforts, there are those who regard LGUs with cynicism and distrust because of certain prominent examples of mis-governance at the local level. They point to extravagant city and municipal halls as monuments to the fiscal irresponsibility of some LGUs.

NO FREE LUNCH

Cielito Habito

Dependency syndrome

Critics fault the dependence of LGUs on national government resources via the Internal Revenue Allotment (IRA) as the primary source of their annual budgets. The situation varies widely. Cities like Makati and Quezon City, which can raise substantial local revenues, are indeed the exception, but actual LGU experience on IRA dependence varies widely. It depends, among other things, on inherent circumstances of the LGU, and on the proactiveness and political will of local officials. On the former, location (whether in the remote countryside or in the urban centers) is an obvious factor that determines how easily a local government can raise revenues on its own. There are also cases like that of Los Baños, Laguna, where the bulk of the territory is public land exempt from real property taxes, with the University of the Philippines owning the better part of the town's land area. And then there is Lanao del Sur, where provincial officials tell me that there is hardly any business to tax, for obvious reasons, and real property taxes are virtually unenforceable on recalcitrant landowners.

Hurdles

Many critics—including some international institutions—believe that the IRA mechanism itself has fostered the dependency syndrome among LGUs that they lament. To be fair, it must be recognized that much of the revenues raised by and for the national government originate from taxpayers, assets and economic activities at the local level, with some revenues actually collected through the LGUs themselves. These same LGUs are unhappy about how they must promptly remit collections to the national treasury, and then go through all sorts of hurdles to obtain release of their budgets from the national government.

And there are more hurdles. LGU officials also point out that obstacles to raising more local revenues often come from the national government itself. A persistent issue is the inability of LGUs to adequately tax branches of big businesses located within their jurisdiction, for lack of accurate information on these establishments' gross sales made within the locality. The LGUs hosting the headquarters of such companies (especially Makati) may be getting an undue share of the revenues from local business taxes due, at the expense of the LGUs where the firm's branches generate their actual business. Their request for the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR) to share the information needed to correct this has gone unheeded because of a gray area in the law on tax confidentiality. This difficulty need not be insurmountable, but has yet to be resolved.

LGU forums

In pursuit of stronger local fiscal management, a series of policy discussions dubbed "Responsibilities and Resources: LGUs Can Do It Better," is being conducted with municipal mayors on Jan. 20, city mayors on Jan. 24, and provincial governors on Feb. 3. The forum outcome will guide reform initiatives of the Ateneo-led Economic Policy Reform and Advocacy (Epra) program toward asserting the crucial role of LGUs as prime movers for national development.

The forums are premised on the conviction that LGUs can indeed do it better: better than before, and better than the national government can. But we need to identify the necessary interventions to provide them the right incentives, capabilities, and policy environment to bring out their best.

'Romancing the Gifted'

Those of us who spent some of the most critical years of our lives under the motherly tutelage of Dra. Cleofe Bacungan ("Drabacu" or "Drabacs" as we affectionately called her), director of the Philippine Science High School for almost two decades, will be pleased to know that the book honoring her is finally out. "Romancing the Gifted" is more than a tribute by PSHS alumni to a woman who dedicated not just her career, but her very life to thousands of gifted youth in the country's acknowledged premier high school. It is also a historical account, a window into the backgrounds of many prominent Filipinos produced by PSHS, and at the very least, a sentimental record of adolescent reminiscences that should bring alumni on a pleasant journey back in time.

PSHS alumni are invited to the book's launch on Jan. 21 at 8:30 a.m. at the school premises. Purchase of the book will help the PSHS Foundation continue assisting the school in ensuring a continuing crop of young Filipino leaders who will shape the country's future for generations to come. Call the PSHS Foundation office at 924-0655 for orders or inquiries. Comments welcome at chabito@ateneo.edu

Expected farm yield seen to bring down RP rice imports in 2006

By Christine A. Gaylican

THE HIGH FARM YIELD EXPECTED IN THE first semester may allow the government to cut the country's rice imports, which last year reached over 1.67 million metric tons.

The country's rice production in the first semester of 2006 may reach a total 6.39 million metric tons—higher by 6 percent than the yield posted in the same period last year, Department of Agriculture Secretary Domingo F. Pangniban said.

According to Pangniban, additional areas will again be converted to hybrid rice production in the next cropping season.

Pangniban, in an interview on Friday, said he was expecting an additional 30,000 to 40,000 hectares to be planted with hybrid rice seeds.

The higher yielding rice seeds are expected to produce about 4 to 7 tons per hectare.

The inter-agency Rice and Corn Committee sets the level of imports—which for this year has been pegged at 1.8 million MT—for the National Food Authority.

But Pangniban said the NFA would not have to bring in that amount of rice this year.

"The importation may be lower than what has been expected," he said.

Under the GMA rice program, the DA hopes to weed out perennial supply problems and save on costly rice importation.

Rice imports now range from $290 to $310 per metric ton. If the NFA were to use up its quota and import the entire 1.8 million metric tons allotted for this year, it would cost the national government over P29 billion, based on the P54:$1 exchange rate.

The NFA will be importing some 350,000 metric tons of rice in the first semester. The imported rice will be part of the country's rice inventory for 2006.

According to officials, the country usually imports in the second quarter of each year the bulk of its rice requirement for use in the third quarter—the lean season for local harvests.

The NFA has the sole authority to import the commodity.

For the rest of the year, the planting of hybrid varieties will be downsized to 29 provinces, following a technical review that would determine the areas with the highest yield potential.

To encourage farmers to shift to hybrid rice seeds, the DA will provide a P1,300 seed subsidy and various forms of technical assistance, such as techno-demo farms and fertilizer discounts.

DOTC

$1.9-B pe

By Clarissa S. Batino

THE GOVERNMENT economic development corporation (EDC), the Universal LRT Corp., the $1.9-billion MRT 7 rail and road project, to post a performance bond, equivalent to the project cost, from the 25-year venture.

The consortium—composed of local developers led by the Israeli businessman Eli Lev—will undertake the $1.23-billion project, which will run from North Edsa, and its $1.9-billion hub and real estate component.

The Cabinet-level Investment Committee is scheduled to meet in Malacañang to break the project. President Macapagal to chair the meeting.

Government Warning is dangerous

ICC wants to break $4-B MRT 7 impasse

Performance bond, cap on rate of return still the main issues

Two outstanding issues have to be resolved. One is whether to allow the MRT 7 consortium to exceed the 11.9 percent rate of return ceiling that the National Economic and Development Authority had set. The other is the $1.9-billion performance bond.

The Department of Transportation and Communication wanted the ICC to allow Universal LRT to go beyond the 11.9 percent return that will arise from cost efficiency, not tariff increases, but only up to 14 percent.

The excess revenue must be shared equally by the consortium and the government and any return beyond 14 percent should accrue strictly to the government, said Transport Assistant Secretary Roberto Castanares.

The DOTC also proposed the setting of the performance bond at 10 percent of the rail and real estate construction cost, which is only $390 million. This, Castanares said, was the standard requirement in government projects.

The DOTC suggested that the performance bond issue be among the parameters of the Swiss challenge for the project, which is required for projects arising from unsolicited proposals.

"Let us test the market such that whoever could come up with the performance bond better than the proponent's offer and closest to the $1.899 billion required by the ICC gets the project," Castanares said.

This way, he said the government could find out if its performance bond requirement was realistic.

"If the ICC would insist on its condition, then no BOT project would push through and therefore the agenda of the President insofar as decongesting Metro Manila would not be realized," said the transport official.

The MRT 7 project comes with a real estate component where the consortium is committing to construct 2,500 residential units and 300 office units each year on a 174-hectare area in Bulacan.

To improve accessibility with other modes of transport, the consortium will construct a 22-km road in Bulacan and a 20-ha bus and train depot also in Bulacan.

The SM Group owns 60 percent of MRT-7's real estate venture and 25 percent of the railway project. The Universal LRT consortium is composed of Siemens, Alstom, China Railway 18, EEI Corp. of the Yuchengcos and Merlin Capital of the Tong family.

"We suggest that with increased efficiency, good performance and a higher level of ridership within the capacity provided under our agreement, our investors be given the chance to exceed the projected rate of return," said Levin, president of Universal LRT.

Defensor's loose ends at DENR

AS SECRETARY

Michael Defensor moves from the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) to Malacañang, he leaves behind some loose ends. Whoever takes his place at the department has some housecleaning chores ahead of him.

On April 6, 2005, Defensor signed Administrative Order No. 2005-06. The subject: Guidelines for the Institution of a System of Mandatory Environmental Insurance Coverage.

Virtually every business that owns, trades in, and develops private or public land is exposed to a growing risk of legal action. Increasing public awareness and concern over pollution issues, an ever-growing list of potentially hazardous materials, and unexpected catastrophes leave companies facing huge clean-up costs and liabilities arising out of bodily injury and damage to other people's property. The AO is designed to address these concerns.

The AO requires all ongoing activities/projects and applications for an Environmental Compliance Certificate (ECC) and/or Certificate of Non-Coverage (CNC) to be covered by an environmental performance bond and Pollution, Impairment and Clean-Up Liability Insurance.

The performance bond is commonly required of a contractor. The bond guarantees that the contractor will finish the project in accordance with the approved plans and specifications. If the government owns the project, the performance bond, if I am not mistaken, has to be issued by the GSIS, in accordance with a Marcos decree.

The insurance policy—a highly specialized, and recently designed policy not yet marketable in this country—answers for all claims arising from damage to the environment, bodily injury and property damage. This policy would have covered the environmental damage arising from the accident at the Marcopper mines in Marinduque some years back.

But the AO cannot be implemented because another set of guidelines has yet to be issued. This set should specify, among other things, the amount of the performance bond (this is usually expressed as a percentage of the contract value), and the limits of liability of the insurance policy. Almost a year after the AO was signed, the implementing rules and regulations are still being hammered out.

Then there is the problem of what policy form is to be used. Last June, a company, heading a consortium, submitted a form for the approval of the Insurance Commission. This form seems to be a British version. There is also an American version that has yet to be submitted to the commission. Faced with an insurance policy it has never seen before, the commission is understandably taking its time acting on the form.

In its present wording, the AO has some provisions I find quite disturbing. First, all claims against the policy shall be paid in escrow to the DENR. Then, the DENR will decide how the money will ultimately be disbursed.

A claim can run into tens of millions of pesos. It seems to me it is not safe for a government agency to hold on to such a large sum without any rules.

I can accept this provision if the claim arises out of, say, the pollution of a river where it is not easy to determine who is the eventual beneficiary. But, if the claim arises out of damage to private property or injury to specific persons, the claim should be paid straight to the claimants.

More disturbing is the provision saying that the insurance policy must be issued by an insurance company duly accredited with the DENR. Accreditation is the job of the Insurance Commission, not the DENR.

An accreditation scheme such as the one prescribed under the AO is always meant to allow the accredited company to corner or monopolize the business. Accreditation is like an exclusive franchise. This inevitably results in high premium costs and poor service to the insuring public.

If the insurance company is duly licensed by the Insurance Commission and is authorized to issue the insurance policy, the DENR should accept the company and the policy.

Most important of all, DENR should realize that if a person is smart enough to undertake a contract that needs an Environmental Compliance Certificate, he should be smart enough to buy the right insurance policy from the right company at the right price.

At any rate, these two provisions alone make the AO a recipe for graft and corruption.

Group dares telcos to make SMS promos permanent

By Alexander Villafania
 Contributor

CONSUMER ADVOCACY GROUP TXTPower is challenging mobile telecommunications providers to make their SMS and call rate promos permanent and standard.

In a statement, TXTPower convenor Trixie Concepcion argued that the telecommunications providers have been constantly coming up with promos that lower the cost of text messaging and phone calls, which showed that the companies were still earning from the promos.

Concepcion cited Smart Communications' Flat Rate, Globe Telecom's Celebrate and Sun Cellular's Unlimited. The promo mechanics varied from a flat rate of P15 per three minutes of phone calls, 10 centavos per minute charging, to unlimited call or text use for a 12-hour period.

"These telcos have shown consumers that cheap calls and text is possible and in fact profitable for the companies," Concepcion said.

Concepcion added that the promo rates could further help Filipinos by lowering telecommunications costs.

She also said that the telecommunications companies can also optimize the use of their network infrastructure through their promos.

She is calling for the National Telecommunications Commission to require the providers to lower their rates.

"It is high time that they act to put the interests of these consumers over the large rate of profit these telcos are enjoying amid the rising cost of almost all services and goods needed by the consuming public."

There had been previous proposals from Congress to lower the rates of telecommunications cost. Several congressional bills were consolidated to become one proposal that pushed for a six-second billing system for mobile phones.

The proposal is currently being reviewed by the committee on information and communications in Congress.

Video, mobile devices get married . . .

chief operating officer of American cable service provider Cox Communications, agreed. He added, however, that the video-mobile marriage was facilitated by the need to push video products to the retail market, outside cable's comfort zone of offering services straight to homes.

"Millions and millions of consumer electronics devices are being offered by retailers," said Esser. "It's our responsibility to make sure that the cable content users get in their homes can also be placed into their mobile devices. At the end of the day, we want our consumers to go to retail stores and not just get our content at their homes. If you want a cell phone with our cable content, you go to a retail store. Having our products at retail would be a competitive advantage."

MobiTV's Whetstone said the biggest challenge facing mobile video is lack of awareness that the technology is already available.

"People think this is still future technology," he said. "They don't realize that you can go straight to a retailer and get it, so the biggest challenge is (lack of) awareness."

The impending success of the video-mobile marriage is partly attributed to the decline of the film industry. Mobile video is gaining steam as movie ticket sales continue to plummet. Estimates from Nielsen EDI peg 2005 ticket sales at $8.8 billion, down 4.2 percent from $9.2 billion recorded in 2004. Movie theater attendance is also dropping. About 1.4 billion movie tickets were sold in the US last year, an 8.5-percent decrease from 1.53 billion tickets sold in 2004.

Hollywood star Tom Hanks who spoke at the CES acknowledged this when asked about how movies on mobile devices would affect the film industry.

"The audience will be pulling content toward them," said Hanks. "The box office will always have its ups and downs. I do shoulder some of the responsibility for having low movie ticket sales last year because frankly, there was no Tommy Hanks film last year."

Director Ron Howard who was also at CES had another view.

"Nothing's going to replace the great social experience of going out with friends or family and watching a movie on the big screen," said Howard.

Intel: Multi-taskers to use multi-core chips

By Leo Magno

LAS VEGAS, NEVADA—THE TECHNOLOGY industry is seeing the rise of digital multi-taskers and it is but natural for technology companies to cater to this need, according to Intel Corp. President and CEO Paul Otellini.

At the 2006 International Consumer Electronics Show, Otellini said computer users are doing a number of things all at the same time, whether web browsing, playing music, playing games or working on an application.

"We are multi-tasking creatures, and the younger you are, the more so this is true," he said.

This, he said, demands more performance while at the same time users are requiring that their devices become more and more mobile. Paradoxically, such a demand also requires lower power consumption from that high-performance mobile device.

"How do we deliver against that paradox? Intel has made a massive shift in processor development from focusing on generating more and more gigahertz or clock speed per generation of chips to the development of multi-core processors," Otellini said.

These processors, he said, deliver more horsepower and performance for the digital media and multi-tasking operations that people are getting used to.

"At the same time, this shifts the power curve, delivers less heat, improves battery life and enables manufacturers to create smaller devices."

Intel introduced multi-core processor for desktops and servers last year, but has not been able to do that for mobile devices such as notebook computers. At the CES, Intel introduced the Centrino Core Duo, which the company claims is 68 percent faster and consumes 28 percent less power for an extra hour of battery life and better wi-fi performance. This is now positioned as a multi-core processor for notebook computers.

Intel also showed an array of products from Sony, Dell, Fujitsu, Lenovo, LG, Samsung and other notebook manufacturers using the Centrino Core Duo. One notebook even had a DVB (digital video broadcasting) receiver which enabled it to pick up TV signals for live mobile viewing from the notebook. The notebooks were then subjected to multiple tasks. A notebook with a single core processor which was subjected to the same tasks froze because it could not handle the processing required.

"The Centrino Duo platform we believe is the processor for the next era of multi-tasking, mobile computing," Otellini said. "It's optimized for low power, performance and digital entertainment. Ever since 1993 when the Pentium was introduced, it has revolutionized computing. Core Duo is our first premium brand since the Pentium, but it is three times smaller at just about the size of a dime. It's a hundred times more powerful than the first Pentium."

Otellini said the Core Duo will have a fast uptake in the market. It took Intel one year to ship the one millionth Pentium processor, but Otellini said it will take them only three weeks to ship the millionth Core Duo.

Beyond the notebook computer, Intel will in the future ship Core Duo chips for smaller handheld devices like personal digital assistants and cell phones. This, Otellini said, "will blur the differences between desktop, mobile and consumer electronic devices."

Tariff on ceramic tiles slashed

By Ronnel W. Domingo

THE SAFEGUARD TARIFF ON IMPORTED ceramic tiles has been reduced to P2.45 a kilo for 2006, following a review provided under a measure extending the duty for three years, according to the Department of Trade and Industry.

In an order dated Jan. 6, Trade Secretary Peter B. Favila said the tariff was 12.5 percent lower than the P2.80 imposed last year, or the first year of the extension.

Favila said the safeguard tariff would again be reviewed this year and the next.

The safeguard tariff is an additional duty imposed on an imported article, in the event that substantial importation of the product has been seen to cause injury to the domestic industry.

Similar to dumping and countervailing measures, the safeguard duty is one of the trade protection measures available under the World Trade Organization.

According to Favila, it was found out during the review that the importation of ceramic floor and wall tiles from China and Hong Kong increased to 90 percent of the total volume of tiles shipped in between January and October 2005.

In 2003, imports from China and Hong Kong represented only 13 percent.

"It was also observed that the continuous growth of imports posed a threat to the viability of the domestic industry and could affect the industry's efforts to improve its competitiveness," Favila said.

Further, it was seen that the landed costs of imports from China increased by 93 percent to P16.14 a kilo as of October 2005 from P8.79 in September 2004.

In the same period, the average landed cost from all countries covered by the safeguard measure went up 62.1 percent to P15.97 a kilo from P9.59.

But Favila said there was no assurance that the uptrend in landed costs would continue.

He said that a reduction of landed costs of imports to 2004 levels would negate the positive gains made by the local industry.

"Selling prices of locally produced ceramic tiles showed a moderate increase of 5.7 percent from 2004 to October 2005, which indicates that the local industry is positively adjusting to import competition," the trade chief said.

Experience points to domestic demand as key economic driver

"HINDI KO MAN KAYANG SAGUTIN ang mga problema ng bayan, at least di ako dumadagdag sa mga problema," muses Aling Fely as she listens to the news on her Taiwan-made radio. A closer look at her home shows shelves of American canned goods, Hong Kong branded clothes and a big-screen Korean TV. "May dalawang hulog pa yan, pero matatapos ko na bayaran," she proudly confides. Little does she know, her seemingly unrelated disregard for local brands and products is a key economic driver that most Filipinos simply ignore.

This practice of preferring foreign products over locally made goods is a common occurrence in the Philippines, discouraging the growth of local products and industries. Many economists believe that this particular behavior of consumers could benefit from a revamp.

Several economic sectors argue that buying locally produced goods will help strengthen the domestic market for local products. In turn, this encourages the growth of local industries that provides added employment opportunities for Filipinos.

They added that local patronage, if and when it becomes a habit among consumers, will help speed up the country's bid to industrialize. This makes the economy stronger and eventually trickles down to an improved lifestyle for the average Pinoy.

This is not an untested theory. A classic example is Thailand's rebound from the 1997 East Asian economic crisis. After the collapse of Thailand's baht, this middle-income country whose exports reached a growth rate of 22% per annum, was suddenly faced with a -10.2% economic growth in 1998.

However, partly through restructuring policies initiated by the Thai government, the country's economic growth radically improved to 6.3% by 2003.

One of the major factors that caused this upswing is the shift from the over-reliance on external trade to a more domestic-led spending. This particular domestic demand-led policy puts emphasis and priority on building demand for local goods and services aimed at boosting internal growth.

Primarily led by a change in attitude, this policy was cascaded and supported by the Thai public and economy.

Sure enough, this move not only helped their economy bounce back, it even made it more resilient, continuously growing despite global uncertainties like terror attacks and the recent SARS crisis.

There is no reason why this particular model can't be applied to the Philippine economy. "The first step is to educate the masses about how they can help the country grow by buying local products," states an economist who teaches at a local university. "They need to know that every little bit can echo into bigger things like helping the economy and creating more jobs. Ultimately, it all comes back to them."

While surprised with the information, Aling Fely was amenable to prioritizing the purchase of local products. With a glimmer in her eye, she points to the sandals on her feet. "Ayan a, gawang Marikina," she proudly says.

BUSINESS OUTSOURCING SECTOR

Skills may be lacking but growth expected

By Erwin Oliva
Inq7

DESPITE THE CHALLENGES OF finding more quality skills to man the booming industry, now known as business process outsourcing (BPO), and the threat from other countries like India, the local outsourcing industry still expects to grow this year.

In a joint forecast by the Business Process Association of the Philippines (BPAP), Board of Investments (BOI) and the Commission on Information and Communications Technology, the Philippine outsourcing industry is expected to generate 103,000 new jobs in 2006, or a 44 percent increase from 2005.

The same forecast showed that about 81,000 new jobs were created in 2005, which is a 53 percent growth from 2004 figures. Based on these growth rates, there is a foreseen slowdown in the generation of newer jobs year-on-year.

The forecast also noted that the outsourcing industry is expected to generate $3.7 billion in revenues this year, or a 52 percent growth over 2005.

"The prospects are still bright for the Philippine outsourcing industry," according to Celeste Ilagan, executive director of the International Promotions of the BOI.

She noted that information technology-related projects registered with the BOI have increased in 2005, and are projected to increase by over 50 percent in 2006. "But we will need to develop more niches in this booming, outsourcing industry," she adds.

Dan Reyes, president of the BPAP, says that he is bullish about the prospects in 2006, but admits that the industry is faced with the challenge of finding quality skills to man expanding operations in the Philippines.

Meanwhile, the call center or customer care industry will account for majority of the new jobs in 2006, according to Ruffy David, president of the Contact Center Association of the Philippines.

He says that the organization,

BPO ventures such as call centers are expected to generate $3.7 billion in revenues this year, a 52-percent increase over 2005. PDI/PHOTO which represents businesses doing outsourced call center work for foreign clients, projects 70 percent growth in 2006 in terms of revenues. "We also want to stress that for every one call center job created, two support service jobs are created," David adds, noting the boom of the real-estate, convenient store and restaurant business in areas where call centers are.

RP must tap into Asian lifestyle trade fairs

THE PHILIPPINES MUST INCLUDE in its development priorities a serious bid to seize market share in Asia's multibillion-dollar international trade fair industry.

The Philippines has fallen far behind other countries to the point where not a single truly international trade fair is held here regularly. Events Eye, an agency that tracks international trade fairs, conventions and exhibitions, listed only five international Philippine trade fairs in 2006.

"Gaining Philippine leadership in at least one sector of Asia's trade fair business makes sound business sense," said Henry Schumacher, executive vice president of the European Chamber of Commerce of the Philippines (ECCP).

"Quite apart from the huge revenues the Philippines stands to gain, trade fairs are a catalyst for economic growth. They're a proven and cost effective magnet that draws foreign investments year in and year out."

He pointed to Germany as an example of a country where trade fairs are taken so seriously that cities fight hard for the right to host them. Five of the top 10 trade fair companies in terms of turnover worldwide are located in Germany.

AUMA (the Association of the German Trade Fair Industry) estimated that Germany's 158 trade fairs in 2004 generated some 23 billion euros (P1.6 trillion) for the German economy and created 250,000 jobs.

Philippine trade fairs, however, tend to be too local in focus with too many competing shows on food, construction, furniture, gifts, toys, fashion accessories and Christmas decor. Philippine trade fairs have also attracted fewer international buyers year-on-year.

In contrast, China, Asia's trade fair leader, hosts hundreds of fairs annually, including the regional versions of major shows such as Koelnmesse's Cebit for the ICT (information and communications technology) industry.

Cebit, held every March in Hannover, Germany, is the world's largest ICT trade fair. This mammoth event drew two million visitors and 8,000 exhibitors in 2005 and has an Asian version held in Shanghai, China, every September.

Needed: Unique RP concept

Schumacher suggested jump-starting the process of regaining our trade fair competitiveness by creating a strong and unique Philippine trade fair concept. The concept has to be distinctively different from China, has to focus on design and quality, and should involve elements of Asean (the Association of Southeast Asian Nations) culture.

A strategic partnership between private business and government will also be essential to the success of this effort.

A valuable storehouse of knowledge about international trade fairs exists locally in Fairs & More Inc. (FMI), an ECCP unit tasked with developing the international trade fairs business in the Philippines.

ECCP/FMI has been at the forefront of either pushing the Philippines as an important trade fair site or in promoting the Philippines and Philippine companies in European, Middle East and Asian trade fairs.

Schumacher said FMI's network of global partners allows FMI to bring to the Philippines international players who may partner in developing locally based trade shows and help internationalize existing ones, provided the concept is right.

"But the window of opportunity is narrow. Hong Kong, Singapore and Bangkok are positioning themselves as the trade fair hubs of the future."

"India is becoming more and more attractive. International trade fair organizers are positioning themselves accordingly. It's now or never for the international trade fairs business in the Philippines," said Schumacher.

Schumacher warned it is no longer sufficient to be a trade fair leader in just one region.

"If you lead in Europe, you must offer your clients a leading show in Asia and in the US. This is exactly the course some of the European trade fair organizers take, developing or buying into shows around the world."

"We are already active in the Middle East and Asia, but we are exploring opportunities in the US and South America," Schumacher noted.

Milan, Paris, Birmingham, Madrid, Valencia and Moscow are also determined to get a major share of the world market.

As it stands now, however,

Recreating an urban waterfront

PASIG RIVER HAS LONG BEEN declared biologically dead, meaning, its waters are no longer fit for consumption and bathing. Marine life can no more thrive. This is because of the irresponsible treatment of this river.

Pasig River has become a public sewage disposal. Industrial plants are put up along the banks for easy disposal of their chemical wastes. Informal settlers have long found the banks of the river a convenient location to put up their settlements, making Pasig River an instant "privy," a dumping site of their unwanted materials and domestic waste.

The waters of this river, which Rizal glamorized in his literary works, have turned murky and stagnant. Structures have turned away from the river.

With its present state, Pasig River is a water course that shows the stark realities of a Third World country.

Water courses, since time immemorial, have been one of the most efficient transport systems in the world. The opening of Panama Canal has brought efficiency and expedited travel and transport of goods in the Americas. Instead of going around the South American continent, vessels from New York going to San Francisco would just have to take the canal. This lessened travel time and cost. Pasig River, history records show, had already been the transport system since the time of the Manila-Acapulco galleon trade and the barter activities between Filipino and Chinese merchants. The city of Manila would never have evolved into a profitable trading center had it not been for Pasig River.

MAPPING THE FUTURE

Water courses have significantly contributed to make business work. Interestingly, civilization started along the banks of Tigris and Euphrates rivers. Thereby, the very first means of transport (read: highway) dating back ancient times were water courses. But at the turn of the century, water courses declined from their glorious state. They deteriorated, caused by man's irresponsible use, treating them as "back of the house" which encourages squatting or informal settlements along the banks and the unscrupulous disposal of industrial and domestic waste.

It is imperative to recreate urban waterfront. The significance waterfronts have brought to humanity cannot just be ignored. The objective of recreating waterfronts is to bring forth the appreciation of a long neglected asset. Rivers and lakes in the more progressive cities in the world consider waterfronts as front door of activity.

By creating lush and inviting promenades and parks, esplanade, and areas for socializing like al fresco dining, cafes and riverside restaurants, informal settlements may be eliminated. When developed, these water bodies will enhance and expand leisure and recreational use and thus will encourage tourism industry; the disposal of waste can be prevented. The development will also conserve marine life, enhance waterscape, and add to the amenity value of water and resources.

Transport system will be augmented giving commuters more options thereby decongesting traffic. Water courses as system of transportation will speed up travel time, getting to one's destination faster—no more delays in the delivery of goods and will provide accessibility to coastal communities that are inaccessible to land transportation.

Waterfront development can link history and architecture. With community participation, resuscitation of "dying" water bodies can be realized. The development can make waterfronts more visually appealing. The Philippines has many rivers and lakes that need to be protected from degradation and pollution. Waterfront development can help preserve and conserve these natural assets that are imperiled for depletion if abuse of these water bodies continues.

Technologies, says that other than call centers, the outsourced back-office industry is also expected to generate more jobs in the country.

These are also the same expectations from the Philippine animation and software development industry in 2006.

Marilyn Montano, president of the Animation Council of the Philippines, says the Philippine animation industry hopes to sustain a 20 percent growth in total revenues over the next five years. The Philippine animation industry is currently a $40 million business, while the global animation outsourcing industry is valued at $72 billion, she adds.

The BPAP-BOI-CICT projections indicate that the animation industry will generate 7,000 new jobs in 2006. In 2005, about 4,500 jobs were generated from outsourced animation work to the Philippines.

The Philippine software development is currently focused on a program, dubbed Fly-High 2010, which hopes to generate more jobs for this sector, according to Mon Villar, executive director of the Philippine Software Industry Association.

The software development industry, which deals with projects for export, is projected to generate 20,000 jobs in 2006. Meanwhile, the software development industry dealing with the domestic market is projected to employ 31,000 people this year.

A Canada-based market research firm predicted that the outsourcing will lose its luster in 2006, as organizations decide to take back certain IT operations that have been outsourced to third-party providers.

"As a number of multi-year deals are up for renewal globally, outsourcing will lose its luster as organizations take back certain IT functions, selectively outsource, or set up their own remote operations," XMG stated in its 2006 prediction report found at www.xmg-global.com.

It added that with heightened awareness of the capabilities of Asia Pacific countries and the increasing internal tolerance for risks in operating offshore, several organizations that have previously outsourced multi-year contracts with an offshore component will set up its own remote operations offshore to support its internal business process and IT requirements.

The Philippine outsourcing industry, in partnership with the Department of Trade Industry, is scheduled to hold this e-Services Philippines conference and exhibition at Edsa Shangri-La Manila on Feb. 16 to 17, 2006.

Organized by the Center for International Trade Expositions and Missions, the e-Services Philippines will invite international and local speakers to discuss the prospects of the outsourcing industry in 2006.

The conference and exhibition will also feature global industry experts on emerging issues affecting the industry. Avinash Vashistha, founder and managing director of outsourcing consultancy neoIT and author of Offshore Nation, is among those invited to speak at the conference.

Nigel Roxburgh, founding director of UK's National Outsourcing Association, has also been invited to discuss prospects in the UK market.

THE REMARKABLE GROWTH OF THE UNIT INVESTMENT TRUST FUNDS

The growth of the UITFs is partly attributed to the good performance of both fixed income and equity markets last year giving more opportunities for professional fund managers to outperform the set fund benchmarks, as well as other investment vehicles. Likewise, the efforts of trust entities in educating their marketing personnel and informing clients of the benefits and advantages of the product are also credited for the amazing growth.

While it is advisable for investors to stay invested in the UITF for a longer period of time, clients can generally redeem units of participation at any time. The fund will not have difficulty redeeming such units of participation because UITF investments are limited to marketable or tradable securities. Another benefit of the UITFs is the wide choice of minimum investment amounts offered by the trust entities. Investors both novice and savvy ones can choose from a wide range of minimum investment participation.

To ensure the sustained growth of the UITFs in terms of product depth, distribution channels and best practices, the Trust Officers Association of the Philippines (TOAP), in close coordination with its member institutions, retail fund market experts and the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP), did a workshop conference in October of 2005 aptly called UITF Workshop Conference: Crafting a Medium Term Plan. Additionally, the association endeavors to continually educate the investing public through press releases, awareness campaigns and investors fora.

The year 2005 was a tough year but more than that, it was a rewarding year for the Unit Investment Trust Fund (UITF) business in the Philippines. With the implementation of BSP Circular 447, trust entities revolutionized the approach to personal investment with the introduction of UITFs. The total Assets Under Management (AUM) of the UITF industry reached an astonishing level of over P100B as of the end of 2005, making the product one of the most successful in the financial industry in recent years.

A UITF is an open-ended pooled trust fund denominated in Philippine Peso or U.S. Dollar, which is operated and administered by a trust entity and made available by participation. Each UITF product is operated and governed by a Declaration of Trust, approved by the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP), which contains the mechanics for investing, operating and administering the fund.

With the majority of the UITFs introduced in the 2nd quarter of 2005, the product, even at its current infancy stage, has already gained notable acceptance from the investing public.

Currently, there are about 70 UITFs in the market offered by 20 Trust institutions while applications for 8 new UITFs from 3 financial institutions are still awaiting BSP approval. The new funds once approved and introduced into the market will make the product offering even more robust.

The marketing personnel of banks and trust entities are required to be certified to sell the UITFs. These personnel should be able to discuss the features, benefits and risks in investing in UITFs.

UITFs are available in a wide-range of fund types: money market, fixed income, balanced and equity, in both Philippine Peso and in U.S. Dollar contributions. Assets of the UITFs are marked-to-market; therefore, providing investors with more accurate and fair value of the investments of the fund. It ensures that no participant in the fund is put at a disadvantage as a consequence of new investors coming in or of existing investors getting out of the fund. The mark-to-market methodology is in accordance with international best practices. Investors in the UITF enjoy better earning potentials without having to invest very large sums of money.

AC Nielsen has new managing director

AC NIELSEN Philippines announced the appointment of Benedicto Cid as its new managing director. Before joining AC Nielsen Philippines, Poch had over 30 years' experience in marketing and general management roles at a number of FMCG companies.

Most recently, he was general manager of IDS Marketing (Philippines) Inc., a leading distributor of consumer goods. Before that, he was with New Zealand Milk, Kellogg and Gillette, where he was posted to Australia and Singapore.

He began his career at Procter and Gamble, starting in market research then moving to brand management.

In his new role, he assumes overall responsibility for the direction and leadership of the customized consumer research, retail measurement and consumer panel business units of AC Nielsen Philippines.

Ordoñez is new AFCM vice president

Ernesto M. Ordoñez, president of Cement Manufacturers Association of the Philippines (CeMAP), was elected vice president of the Asean Federation of Cement Manufacturers (AFCM) during the 14th AFCM conference held recently in Singapore.

Ordoñez will serve as vice president for two years, after which, following tradition, he is expected to be elected as AFCM president for another two years when the federation holds its 15th conference in Vietnam late in 2007.

Ordoñez said: "We intend to build on the goodwill AFCM has achieved in the past year. We will do this not only by sharing our best technologies but also by helping each other in the area of international trade policy and practices as we in Asean face the globalization challenges and the opportunities today."

Philippine companies must participate in foreign trade fairs to create international awareness for their products.

Wilbert Novero, FMI vice president for international fairs, said 75 Philippine companies are to participate in five major European trade fairs from January to February 2006.

He said the number was unexpectedly high compared to last year.

"These Philippine companies realize Europe is a market virtually ignored here and they want to take advantage of European opportunities," he noted.

Asia is seen as one of the "hot spots" for trade fair growth in the next few years. This focus on Asian trade fairs by Germany and other Europeans offers the Philippines an opportunity to climb aboard this bandwagon and reap the rewards while there's still time.

'Poverty alleviation key to regional economic interdependence'

ROBERTO F. DE OCAMPO, PRESIDENT of the Asian Institute of Management, discussed "Managing Regional Economic Interdependence" and focused on three concerns at the recently concluded 6th Regional Meeting of the Trilateral Commission Pacific Asia Group held in Beijing, China.

The Trilateral Commission is a major international think tank founded in 1973 to draw together the highest-level group to collectively examine the common problems facing the three regions of the European Union, North America, and Pacific Asia. De Ocampo, former secretary of finance of the Philippines, is among the first Asean members of the commission.

The three concerns he focused on were: that economic interdependence is an unavoidable by-product of globalization; that the private sector had begun to play an increasingly important role in economic growth and stability; and that rapid technological advancement had permanently altered the mechanisms of international finance that, if not well managed, could result in less desirable outcomes.

Setting the Asian financial crisis as a backdrop, De Ocampo believes that there are issues that need to be addressed to ensure effective interdependence. He said that there is a need to reduce tensions between countries with less than friendly relationships. He also held that disparities across incomes and governance might make interdependence a bit longer than it would have been otherwise.

Efforts must be expended to narrow the gap between these disparities.

He also recognized that fighting poverty is a formidable challenge the world, especially Asia, faces. "If integration is seen to least benefit, or even hurt the poor, then regional integration will remain unpopular with some sectors," said De Ocampo.

"Thus, to make regional economic interdependence more acceptable to the poor, poverty must be alleviated," he added. Resolving these issues, De Ocampo concludes, are crucial to an effective economic interdependence.

The end of the Cold War called for a fresh vision of what an outward-looking partnership could accomplish. The opportunities were remarkable, and yet, part of the "glue" that held the three regions together, had dissolved. Helping meet this leadership challenge is at the heart of today's Trilateral Commission effort.

Under gov't rationalization, lazy employees will remain

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

ALL INEPT, LAZY AND ABSENTEE government employees will be spared from President Macapagal-Arroyo's directive to streamline the bureaucracy estimated to cost P10 billion in retirement packages.

Budget Undersecretary Laura Pascua says that a bureaucrat's aptitude or performance would not be a factor in the on-going rationalization program because the review would only focus on the relevance of their respective positions.

"It is a function-based approach so that there is no favoritism. It will be based on a review of functions that are redundant, duplicative and no longer needed in the bureaucracy to be able to enhance operations and strengthen functions," Pascua says.

"So as long as their current posts are not considered superfluous or redundant, government employees who are lazy or absentees will be retained. Their performance will be covered by another government review program," says Pascua who did not cite specific programs meant to cull bureaucrats that perform below par.

President Arroyo signed last October, Executive Order No. 366 mandating a strategic review of the operations and organization of the executive branch (including state corporations, task forces and councils) to improve government's service delivery and productivity.

The President's order had raised public expectations that the government would finally trim down its 1.2 million-strong

McDo owner voices concern over rising cost of electricity

NOT A FEW BUSINESSMEN ARE OPTIMISTIC about the country's economic outlook this year. Buoyed by the sudden strength of the peso, hopes are indeed high that the Philippines will do better this year.

They are, however, concerned about the high cost of electricity which a businessman says currently eats up a disproportionate slice of companies' overhead.

George T. Yang, chair of Golden Arches Development Corp. (GADC) which holds the local franchise for fast-food giant McDonald's restaurant, fears that if the government will not address the high cost of electricity in the country, this alone would negate all the other economic gains made that will bail us out of economic stagnation. Affordable power, he says, can do a lot to further spur investments. The high cost of electricity in the Philippines is second only to Japan in Asia.

"Electricity cost is way too high compared to other countries and it eats up a disproportionate chunk of expenses among local companies," Yang says, qualifying that he is however highly optimistic of the country's ability to rise above economic challenges.

"Political noises would have died down this year and people would want to try new things. So giving constitutional amendments a chance, buoys up confidence," he says.

According to Yang, business wants stability. While the strength of the peso is a big factor for stability, the high cost of electricity remains a disincentive to investments, he says, adding that another sign that investments are just waiting for the right bureaucracy and throw out government employees who do not perform their functions or report for work only on pay days.

Among the government posts that will be abolished are those which do not produce the desired outcomes; are irrelevant and redundant; those that compete directly with private entities, and those that have been devolved to local government units.

Contrary to the public's expectations, Pascua says that the rationalization program will not geared towards improving the government's fiscal position.

"The objective is not to reduce the deficit. The bottom line of the program is to improve operations and efficiency in bureaucracy," says Pascua.

Pascua says the rationalization program was voluntary as it gives affected employees two options—agree to transfer to front-line agencies such as schools, hospitals and regulatory bodies such as the Land Transportation Office; or accept a compensation package.

The DBM has allocated P10 billion for the rationalization program in the proposed 2006 budget.

The DBM has so far implemented the rationalization program in the Technology and Livelihood Resource Center (TLRC) and the Civil Service Commission and the feedback has so far been positive.

The TLRC reported that its workforce has gone down to 161 employees from 699 and its operating costs have shrunk to P121 million from P250 million (salaries dropped from P73 million to P25 million). It paid P65 million in compensation packages to employees who opted to retire.

"We are currently processing 14 agencies and 6 corporations. We expect the rest of the 70 percent of the executive branch to submit their plans within this semester," Pascua says.

Food firm to support improved nutrition program

KRAFT FOOD PHILIPPINES INC., has expressed its support to the Philippine Association of Nutrition's (PAN) plan to curb malnutrition through proper food fortification and an intensified implementation of an effective home and barangay nutrition across the nation.

"Kraft recognizes the importance of healthy living. This is anchored on the idea that of all the influences affecting our health and well-being, it is the food we eat and the physical activity we engage that are basic and so essential," Kraft Foods Philippines president Marivic Tiongson said in a speech during PAN's annual gathering.

PAN nutrition advocates have also called on local government officials and concerned agencies to intensify and sustain implementation efforts on nutritional improvement at the barangay level where malnutrition program implementation, nutritional improvement has been slow among Filipino households, particularly among infants and young children, pregnant and lactating women. Widespread malnutrition and micronutrient deficiencies remain to be a big challenge in the country.

In 2003, a PAN study showed there are 57 out of 100 households that are still below 100 percent of their dietary energy requirement; 28 out of 100 children aged 0-5 years are underweight while 30 out of 100 aged 0-5 years are underheight due to chronic malnutrition; and five to six children in every 100 are wasted in body due to severe malnutrition. The present economic situation further aggravates the malnutrition problem with about 28 million Filipinos unable to buy food to meet their nutritional requirements and other basic needs.

Overweight and obesity are also prevalent in the country affecting a significant proportion of children, adolescents and adults, which predispose them to certain nutrition and health risks. This is evident in the rising trend in the prevalence of diseases of the heart and the vascular system.

YANG

McDo owner voices concern over rising electricity costs time to come in is the vibrant local tourism industry.

"Tourism is up, and there are great opportunities." Beaches in the Philippines are more beautiful than those in Bali or in Phuket. The growth in tourism also means more investments," he says.

Aside from the exorbitant power cost in the country, the government should likewise contain peace and order in 2006. Yang, however, believes that the government priority should be lower power costs. The government is currently undertaking the privatization of the National Power Corp. to allow competition by letting private firms run the local power industry.

Yang's position is similar to the one taken by various local trade groups and foreign chambers in calling for the lowering of power rates. The Joint Foreign Chambers (JFC), which is composed mainly of the American Chamber of Commerce of the Philippines Inc., the Australian-New Zealand Chamber of Commerce of the Philippines Inc., the Japanese Chamber of Commerce of the Philippines Inc., the Korean Chamber of Commerce & Industry of the Philippines Inc., and the Philippine Association of Multinational Companies Regional Headquarters Inc., has issued a statement recently expressing concern over the continuing rise of electricity costs in the country.

"The cost of power, which is largely a determining factor of business undertakings anywhere in the world, affects the influx of foreign investors and their decisions on when and where to set up their businesses," according to the group.

A recent survey conducted by state power holding firm Power Sector Assets and Liabilities Management Corp. (PSALM) among 15 selected Asian countries, the Philippines emerged in the top five in terms of electricity rates.

The data show the prevailing cost in electricity is one of the major reasons potential foreign investors are cautious in locating their businesses in the country, according to JFC.

Existing foreign investors are likewise hesitant to expand their operations and, worse, may even consider bringing their businesses to neighboring Asian countries where electricity rates are much lower.

The JFC has proposed the early implementation of the "open-access" scheme or the electricity spot market as envisioned in "Republic Act No. 9136, otherwise known as the Electricity Power Industry Reform Act (Epira).

"The said scheme ensures and promotes competition in the energy industry, encourages market development and customer choice. Once successfully implemented, a lower power cost is foreseen, as reduction in Total Delivery Cost is expected to display as much as 40 percent," according to the group.

The group, however, stated the continued delay in the privatization of power assets hamper the start of the open access scheme for electricity. Due to a provision in Section 31 of the Epira, the implementation of the open-access scheme that is targeted to begin on July 1, 2006 may not be fully achieved. In Section 31, it states that at least 70 percent of the total capacity of Napocor's generating assets in Luzon and Visayas must be privatized.

To date, however, PSALM has only privatized six generating plants with a total installed capacity of 608.5 megawatts (MW) amounting to $567 million, which roughly translates to 11 percent of Napocor's total generation capacity, already including the sale of the high-capacity Masinloc coal plant.

If the sale of Masinloc is not finalized, this percentage will even go lower, far from satisfying the 70 percent requirement stated in the Epira.

Foreign banks are not attracting top lady execs

LONDON—INVESTMENT BANKS could find themselves scrambling for top graduate talent in as little as a decade if they don't ditch the macho behavior and make banking careers more attractive to high-flying women.

Another sexism suit—this time a $1.4 billion sex discrimination case against Dresdner Kleinwort Wasserstein by six women complaining of prostitutes and strippers—has hit the headlines.

The accusations that female bankers are harassed, belittled by male colleagues, excluded from client events and passed over for promotion are not new. But they should be ringing alarm bells when cast against the trend in university graduates.

Many investment banks are taking action because they realize that women now make up at least 50 percent of graduates with higher education and the trend is heading upward. Another trend to take note of is the number of women executives who have smashed the glass ceiling and no longer accept second best.

Pascale Alvanitakis-Guely, a managing director at top US investment bank Lehman Brothers, said the result of these trends is that banks will suffer if they don't find better ways to attract and keep women employees.

"More than 50 percent of graduates in this country are women and in 10 years time some statistics suggest that if the trend continues, women will be in the majority, say 60-65 percent," Alvanitakis-Guely said.

Glenda Stone, whose company Aurora promotes women's workplace interests, said the overall perception of banking is that it is still an old boys' club.

But she said top women executives have become so well-educated, experienced and in demand that they can command their own terms and don't have to accept anything that even smells like a grudging invitation to the members' lounge.

"Women have more choice now. There are highly educated women in finance. If the culture doesn't suit them they can move on," said Stone, whose company runs: Where Women Want to Work, a website for women to research careers and employers.

Even common parlance about banking has a macho tone.

Successful male bankers have been nicknamed "masters of the universe" or "big swinging dicks," while hard-driving women make do with labels such as "ball-breaker" or "ice maiden." Dresdner would not comment on the case it is contesting and many banks are making an effort to crack down on offensive behaviour and introduce programmes to attract and retain women.

Morgan Stanley fired four employees recently after they accompanied at least one client to a strip dancing club. It and other banks such as Citigroup, Goldman Sachs, JP Morgan and Lehman Brothers operate networks and mentoring programmes for female staff.

Industry-wide women's networks have also sprung up in the City of London financial hub, including organizations such as Women in Banking and Finance and The City Women's Club.

"We see how much work is being done to attract women, but working on the industry's image should be the next big thing for any recruitment department," said Pandora Omaset, chair of Women in Banking and Finance, who works at JP Morgan Chase.

Despite these efforts women say the banking world still suffers from a dearth of opportunities to network, plan careers or just feel like they belong. Reuters

Are Otoniel Gonzaga and Lea Salonga an odd couple?LEA sings "On My Own" at Merk's Bar Bistro presscon: No more singing after the baby arrives.By Amadis Ma. Guerrero
Contributor

AND SO THE MUSICAL BUZZ THESE days is the upcoming concert of operatic tenor Otoniel Gonzaga, a major performer on the international concert scene, and Lea Salonga, the celebrated singing actress.

This will be held at the Cultural Center of the Philippines on Jan. 25, with Julian Quirit conducting the Philippine Philharmonic Orchestra.

Guest performers include our foremost soprano Rachel Gerodias (Italy-bound and will join the Thomasian cast of "Le Nozze di Figaro" in a farewell performance at the CCP on Jan. 22), and mean baritone Noel Azcona. Most music lovers are excited about the event, but there are a few who look at the pairing of two outstanding but different talents askance. Aren't they, they ask, a musical odd couple?

The question was put to the panel of musical stars, headed by Salonga (five months pregnant) herself, at a recent press conference at Merk's Bar Bistro in Greenbelt, Makati.

"This has been done before," noted Salonga. "There's Pavarotti and Friends. There have been musical marriages. You just pick the right material, the right people... So keep an open mind. You never know what the music will be until you hear it. But there might have to be vocal adjustments."

OTONIEL Gonzaga
in action in a European opera

Rolando Gonzaga, representing his father Otoniel (who is still performing in Canada), said that "this is a celebration of music, not opera or Broadway. I just ignore it [these misgivings]. I think it's a little close-minded to think that way. I'm excited about the concert. I think it's going to be beautiful."

Music director Quirit declared that "music is music." Speaking metaphorically, he likened himself to a "driver" of a calesa who is now driving a Rolls-Royce (presumably Gonzaga) and a Ferrari (Salonga, no doubt).

"I will drive these wonderful people to... [their destination,]" he added.

Soprano Gerodias said that with this concert, "you will be able to tell the difference in their styles. One is not superior to the other, just different. It will be educational, a mix of opera and Broadway."

So there. That's the rejoinder to you, doubting Thomases.

SOPRANO Rachel Gerodias, Lea Salonga and conductor Julian Quirit. He says conducting Salonga and Gonzaga is like driving a Ferrari and Rolls Royce for the first time.

National Artist race heats up

By Gino Dormiendo
Contributor

THE COUNCIL OF PEERS EARLY THIS YEAR had its hands full when it formally convened to decide on the most deserving nominees for National Artist honors.

The visual arts, as expected, was a fiercely contested battlefield, with more than a dozen nominees. There were the perennials—Diosdado Lorenzo, Larry Alcala, Francisco V. Coching—who might ultimately have to be dropped from the list if the revised ruling on posthumous honors (artists who passed away more than 10 years ago would no longer be eligible) were to be enforced to the letter.

The battle was more intense among those who were still alive and kicking—and in fighting form. Such renowned sculptors as Ed Castrillo and Ramon Orlina, painters like Bencab, Araceli Limcaco-Dans, Raul Isidro, Charito Bitanga, and even perhaps Angel Canio were at center stage.

Castrillo, who was reportedly in sick bay, had the full backing of the Art Association of the Philippines, which nominated him. Orlina had the support of another artists' foundation, and Dans was likewise a strong contender, evident in the coffee-table book that documented her life and times.

Two more names were most likely to emerge in the deliberations: Federico Alcuaz and Malang.

Alcuaz had long been a nominee and a recently published tome on the artist further sealed his credentials. Malang, who is openly adversarial in his stance on the selection process, would most likely find himself nominated by his staunchest supporters.

But, given the prevailing temper and taste of the jurors who made up the Council of Peers—those who were unduly picked by fate (drawing of lots) and who would be tasked to represent their peers in the crucial closed-door deliberations (they had to be elected by their peers)—those most likely to become National Artists would have to be kept in utmost secrecy until the moment of reckoning.

Cinco comes to his own

At long last, a Filipino artist is reaping what he has sown.

Though a virtual newcomer on the art scene, Florence Cinco emerged as a double winner in the 2005 Art Association of the Philippines (AAP) Annual. His work, "One," was awarded first prize in the mixed-media category, beating nearly a hundred pieces that were submitted. His entry "Nirguna Force" was honorable mention in an equally competitive sculpture category.

Cinco, who hails from Calbayog City in Western Samar, seriously pursued art only during the last couple of years, specializing in relief paintings from recycled materials such as brass and iron, and a variety of nuts and bolts salvaged from junk shops.

A representative work in mixed media he entered in the 2004 Metrobank Art Competition won first prize, a feat that spurred him to become a full-time artist.

Early last year, Cinco mounted his first solo show at The Big & Small Art Co. Here, his style using recycled mixed media became even more distinctive, though many of the pieces were admittedly small, even minuscule, considering the artist's expansive treatment of his cosmic universe.

Alcuaz and Malang

A loyal disciple of Hare Krishna, Cinco practices what his group preaches. He subscribes to a strict vegetarian diet, does yoga daily, and adheres to a spiritual lifestyle while in pursuit of artistic ends.

Cinco worked on his AAP entry to articulate his thoughts on the essence of oneness, a holistic belief in the union of body, mind and spirit. The image of a seemingly infinitesimal gray grid laced with circular knobs easily grabs one's attention. On closer viewing, the technique of multiplicity in the "DESCARTES' SECRET NOTEBOOK" BY Amir D. Aczel is a nonfiction book about the great philosopher's alleged secret notebook. Gottfried Leibniz, a great mathematician, had reportedly searched for the notebook and found it in the possession of Claude Clerselier. But Leibniz was allowed to copy only a couple of pages, which, amazingly, he deciphered on the spot. His hastily scribbled notes are all we have today of Descartes' notebook.

"A Briefer History of Time" by Stephen Hawking is a friendlier version of Hawking's worldwide bestseller "A Brief History of Time," a landmark in scientific literature. In the new book, the author makes scientific concepts such as relativity and quantum theory more accessible to nonscientists.

In "Masterpieces: The Curator's Game," Thomas Hoving introduces us to the challenge and fun of recognizing art by adapting an imaginative exercise among curators: identifying details of larger museum masterpieces. In this book, 215 visual details—each accompanied by a brief verbal clue—require readers to examine art with a curator's eye. Some details are instantly recognizable, while others will send readers hunting from which paintings were they derived. In the end, readers will be rewarded with a familiarity of the great works. The key is looking very carefully.

COLOSSAL BOOK of SHORT PUZZLES and PROBLEMS

MARTIN GARDNER

"The Colossal Book of Short Puzzles and Problems" gathers the columns for over 25 years of Martin Gardner in the Scientific American. The columns challenged thousands of readers by distilling complicated mathematical concepts into puzzles that enticed both novices and experts. Now for the first time, Gardner's puzzles are gathered in book form. Arranged by subject (algebra, geometry, logic, wordplay) from easiest to hardest, this is an indispensable book to all those who enjoy a good brain teaser.

The books are available at National Book Store.

GALERIE Y presents Fred Ramirez's "Shadows in Red" at the lobby of the Waterfront Hotel and Casino, Lahug, Cebu City. Ramirez specializes in abstracts and is known for his "Cosmic" series, which depicts the energies of the cosmos and his vision of the universe. The exhibit runs until Jan. 22.

SOCIAL realists will mount an exhibit of graphic designs, "Isyu," at the Faculty Center of the University of the Philippines in Diliman, QC, Jan. 16-28. The works to be exhibited are mostly editorial cartoons done by Neil Doloricon, Benjo Laygo and José Tence Ruiz, collected through years of working with various dailies. Other artists are Boy Dominguez, Ed Coronel, Egal Fernandez, Biboy Delotavo, Adi Baens Santos, Ato Habulan and Ed Manalo.

MALANG is celebrating his 78th birthday with an art exhibit at the Art Center of SM Megamall on Jan. 20. The show is curated by West Gallery.

AVELLANA Art Gallery kicks off the new year with three separate exhibits that open today. In "One Third," Allan Cosio romances the endless seasonal shifts in a meditative abstract mood which evokes the serenity of a Chinese print. Ferdinand Doctolero's "Liawliw: Glance on Urban Colors" portrays sweeping panoramas of urban landscape characterized by nervous energy and exuberant colors. Jesus Bermudez's "Flowers Are Forever," captures the transience of natural objects in wood carvings that have a deep affiliation with folkloric art. The newly renovated gallery opens at 10 a.m. There will be a reception with the artists at 6:30 p.m. Avellana Art Gallery is at A-19, 2680 F.B. Harrison St., Pasay City (fronting Gideon Academy). Art that's forever young

By Constantino C. Tejero

ALLAN COSIO IS ONE OF THE most important artists of his generation (not only is he into painting but also into sculpture and tapestry), yet he is not about to rest on his laurels. That is, he appears loath to repeat himself.

Active on the art scene since the mid-1970s, Cosio is still producing genre pieces such as portraits, nudes and landscapes. Already in his mid-60s, he is still exploring the basics of line and structure, form and color. Yet every exhibit of his is characterized by newness.

Cosio has straddled art movements and styles from Op Art to Abstract Expressionism, from representational to illusionist. A clear polarity is his portraiture and abstraction.

In a recent exhibit, the classic nude became new with his distortion of the figure and drenching it with a preponderance of red until the pieces turned expressionistic. Now in his rendering of landscape (a continuation of his exploration a few years ago), he is conjuring a whole generation of Impressionists and some Postimpressionists.

Cosio's large-scale pieces in acrylic on canvas (mostly 5 ft x 8 ft), in an exhibit simply titled "Paintings," were recently displayed at Le Soufflé on Amoroso Drive, Rockwell Center, Makati City.

The pieces have poetic lines for titles:

"Lovely Flowers, Pray," "Now in Joy and Sorrow," "Softly Sighs the Voice of Evening," "Ne'er Could There Be," "When Joyous Thoughts."

While Cosio's technique in his previous landscapes resembled Gustav Klimt's rendering of the landscapes of his lakeside vacation place—the canvas clogged with points of light and dots of color, flattened figures, and without perspective—this time the dots occupy only the sides and borders of the canvas, thus allowing some perspective and showing the spatial relation of sky and blossoms.

While before Cosio's leaves, trees, flowers, river or snow burst in a rich tapestry of brilliant hues, now he has limited his color harmonies in each piece.

"NE'ER Could There Be"

"LOVELY Flowers, Pray"

In the warm harmony of "Lovely Flowers, Pray," a plane of brilliant red is dotted with yellow-ochre, making the whole look like Chinese silk with floral prints.

In "Now in Joy and Sorrow," the sky is a reddish wash against which are dotted the multicolor berries or flowerets of a bush, making it appear like watercolor on paper.

But often, the canvas is just washed with a cool harmony then dotted with a darker tonality of these same colors, rendering the piece as near-monochrome.

While in Cosio's previous landscapes the dense application of hues betrayed an expressionistic tendency peeking out of an impressionistic veneer, here in these new landscapes the color planes and washes demonstrate a lightness of touch.

Finally, while in his previous landscapes Cosio obviously used Western technique (the repeated strokes of Monet, the pointillism of Signac, the dots-clogged canvas of Klimt, the painterly energy of Van Gogh)—now his landscapes clearly allude to Oriental painting.

This is art that looks young, therefore, joyous. The artist may render a pile of snow and we'd still be seeing springtime.

image pulls off visual interjections, largely with the help of drippings coming from a middle bolt.

Though its attempt to elicit visual pun is contrived, the painting is, however, redeemed by its audacious, truly inventive spirit and especially by its resonant and deeply felt philosophical discourse.

In the sculpture category, where judging was perhaps not at par with that in mixed-media, Cinco had a trio of identical free-standing, iron-clad figures strung and conjoined in a circle. Even more eye-catching than the top winners in this category, the enigmatic sculpture had its lids empty and its legs firm on the ground.

The work was, like Cinco's mixed media entry, witty and inventive, and perhaps missed only a crucial point to get to the Top 3.

Coincidentally Cinco held his second solo show, "Microvita," on Boracay. He was invited by his sponsor, the Planet Gallery and Furniture Shop, to stay for the duration of the show.

With a number of commissions to be completed in the resort, Cinco is the portrait of the emerging artist who lives his art and subsists on it, his veritable bread and butter.

"ONE," by Florence Cinco

His life guided by New Age spirituality, Cinco is obviously in no hurry to attain his goals, and that accounts for his well-articulated images of the universe.

Gallery holds art contest

ENTRY FORMS FOR THE 2006 painting competition sponsored by Galerie Andrea are now available at its main office in Intramuros, Manila, and its branch at The Gallery, Creek-side, Makati City.

The competition is one of the activities lined up by the gallery to mark its 20th anniversary this year, said steering committee chair Karen Gandamra.

All Filipino citizens and foreign nationals who are permanent residents of the Philippines aged 15 onward may join the competition, which has two categories—open and student. Those below 21 will automatically be entered in the student category.

Artists who have won major prizes in major local and international art competitions are not eligible to join.

Finalists will be chosen for each of the categories.

The grand-prize winner of the open category will receive P75,000 (inclusive of a P15,000 gift certificate from Daler-Rowney of England, Europe's leading manufacturer and distributor of professional-quality art materials and supplies). The grand-prize winner in the student category will receive P50,000 in cash and gifts.

The other finalists in the open category will receive P25,000 each, and in the student category, P15,000 each.

Senior artists and art critics will make up the board of judges.

Entries are required to be in professional-quality oil, acrylic, watercolor, gouache, pastel, charcoal, ink or pencil.

"We make this requirement because one of our objectives in sponsoring this competition is to motivate local artists to use professional-quality art materials," Gandamra said.

She said many art collectors had been left with artworks that peeled, cracked, faded, or otherwise disintegrated only a few years after purchase.

Integrating heritage with development policy

First of two parts

AWARENESS AND COOPERATION ARE most important considerations when initiating a legal framework that successfully integrates architectural heritage with development policies.

All sectors, public and private, must be aware of the particular architectural heritage of the city and their joint responsibility to conserve it. They must be aware of the uniqueness of their heritage, of the benefits conservation will bring to the people and to their city.

Most important, both sectors must have the same clear picture of how the integration of the new with the old can be achieved.

Cooperation comes hand in hand with awareness. Conservation of heritage and national development are primarily for the benefit of the people. They improve the quality of life.

Therefore, to achieve them, there must be joint participation of the public and private sectors.

It does not really matter whether government or stakeholders initiate the development program. What matters is that the stakeholders are involved in the program to the point of assuming "ownership," thus assuring their commitment and participation toward the success of the program.

In many foreign examples, government-initiated programs implemented without stakeholder participation have largely been failures. Conservation programs by the City of Manila and the Intramuros Administration are perfect examples.

For an overview of the heritage that is to be conserved, we should look at its total scope. Heritage consists of tangible and intangible manifestations that express the individuality of a culture.

Tangible expressions are architecture, townscapes, cityscapes, painting, sculpture and traditional craft. Intangible expressions are music, dance, literature, cuisine and much more.

After considering the total range of the tangible and intangible, we see that cultural heritage defines the unique qualities of a people, giving them an identity that sets them apart in today's globalized world.

The architecture and townscapes are simply one part of the entire cultural heritage picture—the spaces where cultural activities take place. However, neither heritage nor architecture exists in a vacuum. They are part of human life.

Therefore, we should ideally plan on conserving architectural heritage, including the other tangible and intangible aspects that take place within the architectural envelope. We are conserving the total heritage picture.

Identity

What would the Philippines be without its language, music, dance, sculpture, cuisine and other facets of its culture? Its heritage is what gives the country an identity. Without it, the Philippines could easily be mistaken for any other country in the world.

To keep the Philippines standing out as unique among other cultures existing in the world today, it is therefore essential to conserve all aspects of its heritage, not only the architectural and urban, as part of a national development strategy that sees the importance of total heritage picture to establish a national image.

Conservation of heritage is essential in nation-building.

In nation-building, we are concerned with the hardware, with the measurable. We tally GNP, currency reserves, kilometers of new highways, increased electrical power supply, new airports, number of tourist arrivals, hotels, and so on.

However, to make the gains from improved hardware relevant, they must result in improving the life of the people. Which is where the software takes over.

Software is psychic, not measurable. It consists of inputs resulting in an improved quality of life—comfortable cities, vibrant entertainment, museums that excite people, festivals and other aspects that make life more pleasant for everyone. After all, what good is achieving all the hardware if life remains the same?

In most cities today, many do not like old buildings. They prefer to replace them with new structures. A popular belief exists around the globe that we must destroy the past to move forward, that the past symbolizes an era of darkness, of ignorance, poverty and oppression.

That rationale justifies the continued destruction of what remains of the fragile architectural heritage in many cities.

The new buildings built on the debris of the old are seen to be symbols of having stepped out of the Dark Ages into the 21st century. They are the shining skyscrapers of progress, but not necessarily architecture as good as what they replaced.

Today people realize that skyscrapers are not really the signs of progress as once thought. Hong Kong and Singapore relentlessly built skyscraper after skyscraper over the skeletons of their heritage buildings.

After a few decades of construction, they realized that memory had been erased from their cities, that local residents were looking to revive their connections with the past, and that the special identity of their cities was close to disappearing.

To correct the situation, the Urban Redevelopment Authority of Singapore identified heritage neighborhoods, set guidelines for their conservation. It either purchased blocks of houses for conservation by the Ura or offered assistance to private property-owners who wished to conserve their houses.

The lesson to learn from Singapore is that the legislation did not focus on single, stand-alone heritage properties, but instead on conserving groups of houses or entire neighborhood settings.

Setting gives more relevance to conserving architectural heritage. It encourages a continuation of the living patterns that may have existed within the neighborhood.

Where have you gone, Juliet and Romeo?

By Gibbs Cadiz

IF IT IS TRUE, AS SONTAG ET al have put it, that camp is both the negation of feeling and the affirmation of artifice, then the Metropolitan Theater Guild's ongoing presentation of "Romeo and Juliet" at the AFP Theater might be said to outclass the nightly displays of camp in places like Club Mwah or the old Film Center, hands down.

All unintentional, of course. This is Shakespeare, after all, the Grand Pasha of high art, the performance of whose works is meant to bestow gilded seriousness to any upstart theater troupe. The Bard as a campy object? "Accursed, unhappy, wretched, hateful day!" as Juliet's mother would lament.

Well, that day has come, and what an experience it is to stagger out of the theater at the close of a reportedly P17 million production and find yourself muttering, "What was that?"

Woeful day

Met's splashy debut production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in 2004 never cued us to this woeful day. That rollicking gambol in Baz Luhrmann-Bollywood deconstruction, ingeniously directed by Ricardo Abad, took Shakespeare's most whimsical play and dressed it up in all the right places. As well as announcing the birth of an audacious new theater company, it also made Shakespeare hip and fun enough for young audiences.

"Romeo and Juliet" is resounding (and expensive) proof that hipness can only go so far. Abad's "contemporizing" of the immortal play on young love is wearisome rather than inspiring, tedious instead of rapturous, and it all comes down to the baffling decision to hack Shakespeare's words to their barest while playing up the glitzy stage effects and wuzzy pop touches.

You're off to have your spirit soar with Romeo's "But soft! What light through yonder window breaks?" soliloquy? Forget it. Only the first two or three lines escape the lips of Yan Yuzon, who plays an agile but curiously inert Romeo. Other long passages have given way to brief excerpts, as if the world's greatest playwright were writing punchlines instead of dramatic poetry.

Good if such revisions resulted in language equal to or at least evocative of Shakespeare. But consider this. When Juliet's mother discovers her daughter in death-like stupor, she shrieks, "Oh me, oh my! My child!"

Shakespeare? No, the original lines are "O me, O me! My child!"—archaic but certainly Where have you gone, Juliet and Romeo?

Shakespearean as against their "contemporized" equivalent. "Oh me, oh my" sounds dangerously like Celia Rodriguez cooing in a Joey Gosiengfiao movie.

The friar's furious words upon learning that his letter to Romeo never reached the young man—"Unhappy fortune! By my brotherhood/The letter was not nice but full of charge/Of dear import"—has been rephrased thus: "This letter is full of news of great importance!" (Or at least that's how it sounded from the slurry delivery of Ron Capinding, an otherwise agreeable Friar Laurence.)

Modern? Sure, but in the context of a play that boldly bills itself as "by William Shakespeare," the line is also clunky and perfunctory. Come to think of it, words you could also say of this "Romeo and Juliet." (To be fair, we caught the press gala. Maybe things have improved since then.)

Promising

It is true that a number of key verses still grace the show, most of them uttered by Juliet (a comely Ina Feleo in a very promising performance). But the extent of the changes—and consequently having to sit through three hours of frankly disposable Shakespeare—left us mortified.

Luhmann's gaudy, flamboyant way with material like this has clearly had a major influence on Abad and his creative team. Salvador Bernal's set design of whitewashed steel ramps and neon lights bring to mind a retro-futuristic universe. As in a videogame, when the rival gangs score in basketball, the backboard lights up in blue and an electronic thump is heard.

The costumes are a pastiche of Renaissance cuts and Japanese silhouettes, while the swordfights have devolved into arnis. The resulting indeterminate stew is an elaborate sight.

Where it had worked with "Midsummer's" menagerie of woodland creatures, however, here it is merely loud and showy, underscored in many respects by the cast's frenzied antics onstage.

If anything, that inability to find stillness even in the quietest scenes gives this "Romeo and Juliet" a crippling whiff of anxiety.

The young lovers' coupling, for instance, which features simulated nudity, is at once terribly floodlit (Donato Karingal did the lighting design) and indicative of the "more is more" mindset of the show.

This most intimate of scenes overflows with other writhing bodies—pairs of lovers who enact various Indian-inspired lovemaking postures while Romeo and Juliet do their thing in bed. Yet because hardly a shadow curtains these pairings, their bald exertions seem more comical than erotic. (The musical "Rama at Sita" did it better years ago with dim lighting and fewer bodies.)

More hilarious is the sight of Friar Laurence and his band of Franciscan brothers breaking into a combination jig-breakdance-ballet set to techno music. Writer Dennis Ladaw, normally a very placid creature, offered the best assessment: "It reminded me of the Ewoks."

Musical

The busy dances (choreographed by Dexter Santos) point to a more rewarding course Abad and his team might want to take. If this "Romeo and Juliet" were a musical (hello, "West Side Story"), all this tinkering would make better sense. Indeed, Abad's mise-en-scene seems, in many ways, musically inspired.

The arresting double-funeral tableaux that bookends the play cries out for recurring theme music. Juliet and Romeo's respective moments with Nanny and Friar Laurence after Romeo's official banishment, now collapsed into a single counterpoint scene, would make for an interesting quartet. And the pair's dream sequence near the end (the only embellishment that works, and a moving one) could be an excuse for a great 11 o'clock love duet.

The "Twilight Zone" music, though, has to go. And that angel.

"Romeo and Juliet's" high romantic points are graced by a hunk dressed in a silvery and quite skimpy Grecian dress—yes, an angel. First he descends on a harness during the pair's exchange of vows, then he visits them on their deathbed.

At curtain time, the apparition takes his bow by once again dangling from a harness. So while the rest of the ensemble claim their places upfront, he's stuck up there, forlorn and helpless.

Alas, so is this "Romeo and Juliet."

"Romeo and Juliet" runs until Feb. 4 at the AFP Theater. Call 0928-4001219 or 8919999.

Sen. Miriam Defensor-Santiago asked the question yesterday after House leaders insisted that they did not need the Senate to push ahead with plans to amend the Constitution and adopt the parliamentary form of government.

IN A PUBLIC SLAP AT PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO, FORMER President Corazon Aquino yesterday announced she was boycotting next week's Council of State meeting, warning of prolonged "political turmoil" in the country if Ms Arroyo continued to cling to power.

In a simultaneous move, House Minority Leader Rep. Francis Escudero said he was staying away from the scheduled Jan. 24 meeting at Malacañang called to discuss, among other things, the proposed shift to a parliamentary form of government.

Aquino said the political crisis gripping the country could best be resolved if Ms Arroyo voluntarily resigned from the presidency.

"The very legitimacy of the President's mandate remains under a cloud of doubt," Aquino said in a statement. "Rather than resolve the issue in a transparent and forthright manner, the President has opted to muddle it further by insisting that any allusion to the legitimacy issue is part of a grand conspiracy to unseat her."

Malacañang was diplomatic in its reaction.

"Former President Cory Aquino's participation will be missed," Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye said, noting that it was during Aquino's term that the council was formed.

"But it is certainly her prerogative not to attend," Bunye added.

Aquino's and Escudero's decision to shun the Palace meeting followed an earlier declaration by Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. that he was not coming.

Palace officials had earlier said Ms Arroyo was convening the meeting of the country's top political and economic leaders to discuss proposed amendments to the Constitution, electoral reforms and economic programs.

Cha-cha supporters resorting to people's initiative

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

AWARE THAT IT WILL NOT GET the Senate on board, President Macapagal-Arroyo's administration is relying on a people's initiative to put the parliamentary system in place in six months, sources close to the Palace said yesterday.

The initiative, which needs the signature of 5 million voters, will touch on only one subject—the shift from the presidential to a parliamentary form of government, said two sources who spoke on condition of anonymity because of their roles in the effort.

Ms Arroyo's plan to effect Charter change by June was announced at Saturday's Lakas-CMD national directorate meeting.

The people's initiative was discussed during a closed-door meeting of a political party belonging to the Lakas-led rainbow coalition in the House of Representatives, said one of the sources who attended the event. The other source is one of Ms Arroyo's trusted Cabinet officials.

By limiting the proposed constitutional reform to a single amendment, Charter change advocates are optimistic they can gather the required 5 million signatures—12 percent of all the registered voters and at least 3 percent of the voters in each district.

This means eschewing the thorny and divisive issues of scrapping the 2007 elections and economic changes in the effort to transform Congress into an interim parliament through a plebiscite by June, the sources said.

Keeping the people's initiative strictly to one item would also bolster the legality of the effort as

Bamboo band music lives on, even in PNP

By Luige A. del Puerto

FOR FOUR GENERATIONS, HIS family has breathed music into one of the world's most pliable plants—the bamboo.

Now, Supt. Gilbert Ramos has decided to teach his craft to policemen who form the Philippine National Police Band.

Last September, for the first time in history, the PNP Band played instruments crafted out of bamboo and created music that is distinctively Filipino.

There they were, clutching in their hands, not guns that snuff out lives, but trombones and flutes that soothe lives.

Ramos, a graduate of the University of Sto. Tomas' Conservatory of Music and conductor of the PNP Band, describes the music a bamboo band makes as gentle to the ears.

"Stand near a brass band and the blast is strong. But a bamboo band, no matter how close you are, will not hurt your ears," he says.

On his desk at his office at Camp Crame are stacks of musical scores. On the walls are photos, some in sepia, of a past rich in music.

"Another difference," he says, "is that majority of the bamboo instruments can play only a limited number

JAKARTA, INDONESIA — SOUTH-east Asian terrorists are "regrouping, adapting and recruiting," and more regional cooperation is required to defeat them, Indonesia's president said Monday.

In a speech to lawmakers from the Asia-Pacific region, Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono warned that the campaign against militants would be a long one, and said it would need to be fought on "political, economical, legal, social and spiritual" fronts.

"We know that the terrorists are regrouping, adapting and recruiting," he said. "We all need to intensify our cooperation to fight terrorism."

Indonesia, the world's most populous Muslim nation, is a key front in the war against terrorism in Southeast Asia.

Militants from the al-Qaida linked Jemaah Islamiyah network have launched a series of bloody strikes against Western and Christian targets in the country since 2000, including two attacks on Bali island that killed more than 220 people, mostly foreign tourists.

Jemaah Islamiyah is also blamed for attacks in the Philippines and failed plots elsewhere in the region.

AP

A MUSLIM MILITANT GROUP COMPRISED OF CONVERTS which has links to Jemaah Islamiyah poses the biggest security threat to the Philippines, a regional security analyst said yesterday.

The Rajah Solaiman Movement is composed of Filipinos who worked in the Middle East and later converted to Islam and should be considered a "terrorist Islamist" group, said Scott Harrison, former CIA station chief in Manila and currently managing director of the Pacific Strategies and Assessments Inc.

Filipino intelligence agents arrested the founder of the movement in October along with eight supporters.

They were charged with plotting to bomb high-profile targets, including the US Embassy, and of assisting the Abu Sayyaf and the Jemaah Islamiyah groups.

The Abu Sayyaf and the JI are linked to al-Qaida and are on the US government's list of foreign terrorist organizations.

The JI has been blamed for the 2002 and 2005 bombings in Bali, Indonesia, which left over 200 people dead while the Abu Sayyaf is behind the Philippines' worst terrorist attacks in recent years.

While the arrests have partially broken up the RSM, the group remains "the most potentially dangerous element of terrorism in the Philippines because of their Christian background," Harrison told foreign correspondents.

The group can also easily blend with the rest of the populace, allowing them to operate primarily in Metro Manila, he said.

Last month, the International Crisis Group said in a report that both the JI and the Abu Sayyaf were trying to boost their ties with the Rajah Solaiman Movement.

This came about after the main Muslim separatist group, the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), moved to end ties with foreign militants and began peace talks with Manila.

"Several counter-terrorism 'successes' have inadvertently deepened the nexus between foreign jihadis, Abu Sayyaf, the RSM and the more militant MILF members," the ICG said.

Harrison said lack of equipment, training, funds and inherent corruption within the military were hampering the Philippines' fight against militant groups.

The country's expansive and porous southern borders also make it easy for terrorist cells to enter from neighboring countries.

"Overall, I believe there has been only limited counter-terrorism success in the Philippines in recent years," Harrison said. AFP

AN URGENT APPEAL TO OUR LEADERS AS CONGRESS SESSIONS RESUME

As Congress resumes its sessions, Consumer & Oil Price Watch appeals to our political leaders in both the Senate and the House of Representatives to practice the highest degree of statesmanship and temporarily set aside political issues in favor of more pressing ones such as:

ECONOMIC REFORMS MUST BE THE HIGHEST PRIORITY

The peso has significantly strengthened over the holiday season due to the influx of OFW remittances and the implementation of the EVAT. This momentum must NOT be lost.

We urge our leaders to prioritize pending economic and financial reforms that will encourage more local and foreign investments. This will result in the creation of much needed jobs for our people and will help uplift the quality of life, especially of the poor.

THE WELFARE OF OUR COUNTRYMEN SHOULD BE PUT OVER ANY AND ALL POLITICAL INTERESTS.

DEBATES ON CON-COM MUST BE TEMPORARILY SET ASIDE

Debates on the controversial transitory provisions of the Con-Com proposal are confusing and divisive as most of the proposed amendments are too complex - most especially the transition to a parliamentary system of government.

We urge our leaders to hold proper PUBLIC consultations and deliberations to better explain to our countrymen the merits of a shift from presidential to parliamentary forms of government.

While a change in the form of government may be on the horizon, COPW again reiterates that true and lasting change can only come about through a change in values of our political leaders.

2007 ELECTIONS MUST PUSH THROUGH

As we have stated in our print ads last week, COPW maintains the position that the National Elections in May 2007 MUST push through as provided by the Constitution.

Whether it's a unicameral parliamentary or the current bicameral (which our people will decide in a plebiscite), elections must be held for the 12 Senators, 238 Representatives, and around 17,000 local posts in cities, municipalities, and provinces whose term of office will expire in 2007.

Elections will unite, rather than divide the nation. It will clarify the issues, rather than confuse our people.

THE CLEANUP OF ELECTORAL PROCEDURES MUST PROCEED IMMEDIATELY

The cleanup of electoral procedures must NOT be postponed; in fact, the modernization program should start IMMEDIATELY. This will include computerized registration, automated counting machines, and electronic transmission of votes.

Computerization of our electoral system will ensure transparency and eliminate any possible human intervention or tampering of results.

Furthermore, COMELEC should be cleansed and be made free from political pressure in order to restore its credibility.

Our countrymen are FED UP with elections that they perceive as open to anomalies and manipulation.

Only when they are convinced that the elections they have participated in are clean, honest, and free from anomaly will they respect any results.

MILF rebels see peace talks as done deal

COTABATO CITY — PEACE TALKS WITH THE Philippine government are largely a done deal, the chief negotiator of the largest Muslim rebel group said on Monday, even if only about half of the contentious issues had been settled.

Mohaqqer Iqbal, a member of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) central committee, said his group was confident that an agreement on an ancestral homeland for four million Muslims in the south may be signed within the first six months of this year.

But the final peace accord would have to wait until the two sides have agreed on what form of government would be set up in a specific Muslim territory.

"We're 85 percent finished, that's quantitatively speaking," Iqbal told Reuters at a river-side hideout outside Cotabato City, the financial hub of poor Muslim communities on the southern island of Mindanao.

"In terms of quality, we're still very far because the last phase of the talks is the most difficult agenda and we've done only about 50 percent. But we're inching forward." Government and MILF peace negotiators are due to resume informal talks this month in Malaysia, hoping to overcome "minor obstacles" on the path towards a Muslim ancestral homeland.

"There's no question that large parts of Mindanao, Sulu, Tawi-tawi and Palawan island are part of a Muslim ancestral land," Iqbal said over sweet tea and banana fritters.

"The MILF is very practical. We would not try to reclaim areas no longer in the hands of Muslims. But, like the American native Indians that owned Manhattan in New York, we would like to discuss compensation for the territories lost." Finer details on the issues of territory and governance, including possible disarmament, would be taken up after the two sides come to an agreement on ancestral domain, the third and final major point. The nearly 40-year separatist insurgency by the 12,000-member MILF, the largest of four Muslim rebel forces in the mainly Roman Catholic country, has killed more than 120,000 people and stunted rural development in the impoverished south.

A truce has held since July 2003 and further cooperation with the MILF under a peace agreement would further isolate homegrown groups such as Abu Sayyaf that have been linked to al Qaida and its allied Southeast Asian network, Jemaah Islamiyah (JI).

The United States, Manila's closest security partner in the region and a major source of military assistance, has criticised the Philippines for not pushing the MILF hard enough to crack down on foreign militants hiding on Mindanao.

Washington has said Indonesian militants Umar Patek and Dulmatin — two key suspects in the October 2002 Bali bombings that killed about 200 people — are believed to be in Mindanao. Reuters

Nur wants to go abroad to regain 'vigor of youth' DFA on bid to arrest GIs: Be patient

By Armand N. Nocum

FORMER ARMM GOV. NUR MISUARI, who has had four wives, wants to be allowed to seek medical treatment abroad for "loss of vigor of youth" and other ailments, but government prosecutors say it's a "flimsy sickness" and are blocking the move.

In a four-page "Supplemental Opposition" to the "Motion for Medical Treatment" filed by Misuari, who is in jail pending trial on rebellion charges, Department of Justice prosecutors recommended that Misuari's bid to have medical treatment abroad be "denied for lack of merit."

"If indeed he is sick as he claims to be, treatment cannot simply be had in a hospital of his choice. Neither can (Misuari), by advancing all sorts of flimsy sickness, like loss of vigor of youth, feeling of isolation, emotional trauma, mental suffering, emotional anxiety and mental stress, demand and expect hospitalization, worst, even abroad," the Jan. 16 prosecution motion said.

Misuari, who is detained in a special facility in Fort Sto. Domingo in Sta. Rosa, Laguna, filed his motion with the Makati Regional Trial Court last Nov. 3, saying that apart from medical treatment, his temporary freedom would also afford him the chance to "contribute to the elusive search for lasting peace in Mindanao."

Misuari, chair and founder of the Moro National Liberation Front, led a short-lived rebellion in Sulu in November 2001 after authorities went after him for alleged multi-billion graft at the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao, or ARMM.

In his motion opposing Misuari's request, State Prosecutor Peter Ong argued that the local Muslim leader's attendance of an Islamic gathering and his holding of a press conference during a brief furlough from jail on Jan. 10 belied his claim of sickness.

Ong stressed that Misuari was charged with rebellion, a "heinous crime and a non-bailable offense."

During his press briefing last week, Misuari said he expected the government would speed up the resolution of his case and that he would soon be free.

Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez admitted last week that the government was softening up on Misuari, given the role he could play in bringing peace to Mindanao.

THE ARREST WARRANT FOR THE four American Marines charged with raping a Filipino woman could take 10 days to be served under the rules of court, an official of the Department of Foreign Affairs explained yesterday.

DFA spokesperson Gilberto Asuque has asked the public to "be patient" concerning the Philippine bid to gain custody of the accused, the subject of ongoing negotiations between the department and the soldiers' custodian, the US Embassy in Manila.

"They are now meeting as we speak," Asuque said in a 3 p.m. briefing, referring to the DFA and US Embassy negotiators.

"One of the virtues of diplomacy is patience, and we will exercise a lot of patience coupled with perseverance," he said. "We continue to exhaust all diplomatic means."

The spokesperson said that under court procedures, the officer designated by the court to serve the warrant has up to 10 calendar days—weekends included—to carry out the task. If the officer fails to do so, he is required to state the reason in a report to the court.

Thus, the warrants for the American rape suspects which were issued last Friday by Olon-gapo City Judge Renato Dilag have until Monday next week, Jan. 23, to be served, he added.

As of yesterday, the warrants remained with the Department of Justice from which, Asuque said, the DFA awaits "guidance" on the matter.

Dagupan bishop warns of uprising Fugitive captain pops up at Crame

A SENIOR BISHOP YESTERDAY warned of looming social unrest amid political uncertainty surrounding the government of President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Archbishop Oscar Cruz, a member of the influential Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines, said a widespread feeling of despair and distrust of the government could lead to the "fast formation and ultimate explosion of a social volcano." "There is much resentment and restlessness in the land. People feel not only depressed but also repressed," Cruz said in a statement.

"The country is in big trouble. The people are suffering much. The present is very difficult, the future is far from promising." He said that despite Arroyo's promises to create more jobs, in reality there was less work available for Filipinos even as higher taxes are imposed.

Arroyo's popularity has fallen drastically over allegations she rigged the May 2004 vote, leading to an impeachment attempt in Congress that she overcame last year.

She had admitted calling an election official during the vote-counting but denied any wrongdoing.

However, several of her economic managers abandoned her as well as political allies such as former President Corason Aquino.

The bishop's conference last year censured Arroyo for admitting she called the election official but stopped short of calling for her ouster.

The church remains an influential political force in this mainly Roman Catholic country. AFP

FUGITIVE MARINE CAPT. Nicanor Faeldon is getting bolder in taunting authorities who are supposed to be hunting him down.

Faeldon, one of the supposed core leaders of the 2003 Oakwood mutiny, casually strolled in front of the Philippine National Police National Headquarters (PNP-NHQ) in Camp Crame and even asked a police officer for directions—without getting caught.

He posted the video clip and still pictures of his latest foray into the "enemy camp" on his web site at www.pilipino.org.ph.

He did not give a date for his Camp Crame visit, but it seemed recent since the footage showed Christmas decorations on the lamp posts.

Last Jan. 5, Faeldon released pictures of himself at the Armed Forces of the Philippines Western Command (Wescom) headquarters in Puerto Princesa City taken on Dec. 21, 2005.

Shortly after, he released pictures of himself at the Southern Command (Southcom) headquarters in Zamboanga City.

"No one can stop me from entering these camps unless the corrupt generals themselves man the entrances. The soldiers and officers of the military who remain loyal to the people will not turn me in," boasted Faeldon on his web site.

Faeldon escaped from military custody last Dec. 14 after attending a coup d'etat trial hearing at the Makati Regional Trial Court.

The latest video, taken from a vehicle parked across the PNP-NHQ building, showed Faeldon in a red T-shirt and jeans strolling in front of the building along with other pedestrians.

Faeldon stopped once and asked directions from a police officer who happened to be walking towards him. The police officer, after giving directions, went on his way, obviously failing to recognize the man whom the military and police have made it a top priority to capture.

The police dismissed the photos as a hoax.

"He and his handlers have shown their mastery of graphic manipulation."

Let us not be deceived by their antics," Chief Supt. Leopoldo Bataoil, PNP spokesperson, said when asked to comment on the pictures and video.

Camp Crame commander Chief Supt. Geary Barrias said it was possible that Faeldon had sneaked into the camp without the guards noticing him.

There were no explicit orders from higher headquarters to watch out for him in Camp Crame, he said, adding that the guards do not even have a picture of Faeldon.

New group calls for GMA ouster, special polls

By DJ Yap

THE NEWLY ORGANIZED Socio-political and spiritual group Pagasa is calling for the "non-violent ouster" of President Macapagal-Arroyo and Vice President Noli de Castro to pave the way for special elections as a major first step in bringing about sweeping political reforms across the country.

Pagasa, short for People's Assembly for Genuine Alternatives to Social Apathy, said the removal of the Arroyo administration and the holding of special elections were crucial to resolving the festering political crisis which it said was pushing the country to the brink of civil war.

Since Ms Arroyo and De Castro have said they will not resign and the likelihood of their removal by impeachment was slim, Pagasa said it was backing their ouster through extra-constitutional means, such as a peaceful uprising by the military and the civilian populace similar to the previous two Edsa revolts.

Pagasa is a citizen's movement calling for an end to "manipulative elite rule" and the establishment of true democracy through systemic reforms backed by inner change. It is composed of representatives of the poor and marginalized sectors of society and members of the academe, religious, artist, professionals, non-government organizations and foundations. It was formed at the height of the oust Gloria movement.

In launching the new movement on Sunday, Pagasa spokesperson Nicanor Perlas said the special elections were a better alternative to a military junta that might arise should a military coup d'etat succeed.

A military takeover without citizen support "will result in a bloody mini-civil war among different factions of the military," the Pagasa fact sheet said, adding that a junta "will have a difficult time retaining domestic and global legitimacy, if at all."

In contrast, a special election can provide Filipinos with a "promising and realistic" direction amidst the political crisis, Pagasa said.

"We are suffering from the results of a stolen election and the installation of a de facto military junta," said Fr. Raul "Puti" Enriquez, another Pagasa spokesperson.

"The special election being proposed by Pagasa requires the overhauling of the electoral personnel, structures, and processes, including the removal of all corrupt Commission on Elections officials and personnel, as well as changes in the rules and procedures of the electoral process to guarantee clean and honest elections," according to Pagasa document.

According to Perlas, previous oust-Arroyo movements failed because the people could not see clear alternatives to the current administration.

"Filipinos are so fed up with traps," Perlas said. "They saw the previous anti-GMA moves as a fight between evil and another evil."

If a mass uprising succeeds in toppling the Arroyo administration, a "Body of Stewards," composed of multi-sectoral, gender-balanced and geographically diverse leaders, will step in to temporarily take over the government. Once special elections are called, and new leaders are sworn in, the body will step down, he said.

Perlas stressed that Pagasa is not to be identified with the political opposition, though many of them have approached the group to express support for the movement.

Pagasa has begun a 1 million signature campaign for the holding of the special elections, Perlas said. If they succeed, Ms Arroyo should be removed by May 2006, upon which the Body of Stewards shall take over.

The special election itself can coincide with and use the budget for the scheduled May 2007 polls, he said.

Renegade cop Rizal Alih still inspires fear even among Abu Sayyaf inmates

By Luige A. del Puerto

THEY SAY FAME LASTS FOR 15 minutes, but notoriety lingers.

Renegade cop Rizal Alih may have lost the fire in his eyes but he still inspires fear, even among hardened inmates—suspected members of the notorious Abu Sayyaf terror group among them—currently being held at the Philippine National Police custodial center at Camp Crame where Alih is detained.

Chief Supt. Pedro Tango, officer in charge of the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group, said the terror suspects "have asked not to be put in the same cell with Alih."

"Do you need (proof) of how notorious this man is? Even the Abu Sayyaf is scared of him," Tango said.

Chief Supt. Geary Barrias, Camp Crame commander, said yesterday Alih was sharing a cell with one detainee. He refused to identify the cell mate and would not give details.

In January 1989, Alih led a band of disgruntled policemen and soldiers in taking over Camp Cawa-Cawa, the regional headquarters of the Philippine Constabulary in Zamboanga City.

For three days, the group held Brig. Gen. Eduardo Batalla and Col. Romeo Abendan, the camp's senior officers, hostage.

During a botched rescue operation, the two military officials and 12 renegades were killed. Alih managed to escape.

He was charged with murder but was able to make his way to Malaysia where he was arrested on unrelated weapons charges.

Alih served eight years of a 14-year sentence in a Malaysian prison. He was released last week and was deported to the Philippines.

In Alih's hometown of Zamboanga City, prosecutors want the case moved to another city, Tango said.

"The prosecutors are inclined to request for a change of venue," he said, citing security concerns. "To address their apprehension, they would rather have the trial transferred."

to make the supreme sacrifice of relinquishing her office," Aquino said in her statement.

"Short of that, I believe our nation would be due for protracted political turmoil."

Aquino first called on Ms Arroyo to step down in July last year at the height of the "Hello Garci" tape scandal triggered by allegations that the President had conspired with former Election Commissioner Virgilio Garcillano to rig the results of the 2004 election.

Although Ms Arroyo, along with Garcillano, has denied the accusations, she has not—up to this day—fully explained what it was she was apologizing for when she told the nation in July "I am sorry" for what she called a lapse in judgment.

Aquino's public differences with Ms Arroyo coincided with the dispute involving the future of the Cojuangco family's Hacienda Luisita sugar estate, which the government has threatened to expropriate in order to parcel out to small sugar farmers.

The hacienda is owned by Aquino and her siblings, who are trying to block the expropriation of the land.

Trust needed

In her statement, Aquino said: "I regret that I cannot attend the Council of State meeting."

She said that while she valued the council as an institution, it could only function effectively as a top presidential advisory body "in an atmosphere of trust."

"And therein lies the problem," Aquino said. "At the heart of the crisis besetting the current administration is the fundamental issue of trust."

Aquino said Ms Arroyo's attitude of seeing conspiracies in the criticisms against her "is most unfortunate."

"This posture does nothing to restore the people's trust in the presidency and in the government," she said.

Fragile democracy

She said the country's most pressing problem was neither political nor economic in nature.

"It is a moral issue that cannot be resolved by structural or legal interventions and by government programs endorsed by the Council of State. It can only be addressed by the President herself," she said.

She also said her presence at the meeting might only create more confusion as to where she really stood.

Aquino said she believed she could best serve the people's interests by helping strengthen a fragile democracy.

"Over the short term, this entails working to restore confidence in democratic governance by advocating constitutional avenues out of the present political crisis," she said.

Escudero announced his decision to boycott the Palace meeting after a minority caucus at the Sulo Hotel in Quezon City which decided that no member of the House minority would attend.

Escudero dismissed the Jan. 24 meeting as a mere "photo op" with Ms Arroyo.

The Sorsogon lawmaker, who led a failed move to impeach Ms Arroyo last year, said the meeting was supposed to advise the President on pressing national issues.

"There is no need to reiterate the issues which had long been made known to them. She is the problem—or comprises the bigger part of the problem," said Escudero.

Senate President Franklin Drilon said he hadn't made up his mind about whether to attend.

"I just received the invitation last Friday but I have not decided whether to attend or not. I'm still waiting for the agenda," he told reporters.

Drilon, an erstwhile staunch administration ally, has been the highest ranking government official to call on Ms Arroyo to resign.

New people power

Senate Majority Leader Francis Pangilinan, who has also called for Ms Arroyo's resignation, and Pro Tempore Juan Flavio have indicated that they would attend out of a sense of duty and in the spirit of constructive dialogue.

Rafael Lopa, Aquino's

spokesperson and nephew, said the former President had been busy working on a "new form of people power," which is empowering the microfinance groups.

"We're very active in putting up antipoverty programs and getting people more involved in micro-finance efforts," Lopa said. "She has been actually meeting with many microfinance groups. This is really a new form of people power that she wants to promote. She now wants people power put on another plane."

On the issue of Hacienda Luisita, Lopa said the matter was being handled by their lawyers.

"Tita Cory said there's a process that's still going on right now and let's see how it goes. Government has moved. We'll see what's best for the people (of the hacienda)," he said. With reports from Christine O. Avendaño and TJ Burgonio through a people's initiative needed "a reality check." (See related story below.)

Santiago noted that the Supreme Court, in a 1997 case she had filed against the Commission on Elections, had ruled that a people's initiative for Charter change was illegal because Congress had not passed an enabling law.

"Until now, there is no such law. If the present Supreme Court reverses the 1997 case on the grounds of the split vote, it would be controversial. There is no factual basis for reversing the decision, because the ratio decidendi—the lack of an enabling law—remains the same," Santiago said.

Not necessary or beneficial

"If this Supreme Court reverses the precedent, it would embarrass itself," she added.

Santiago said she was in principle against amending the 1987 Constitution to move into the parliamentary system, because "it is not necessary, beneficial or practical."

"A parliamentary government run by trapos (traditional politicians) will simply mean that the trapos and not the people will choose our head of government. Without principled parties, the highest post will become a trophy of the highest bidder."

"I am strongly in favor of elections in 2007, as provided for by our Constitution. The pressure cooker has to let off steam," Santiago said.

"I am in favor of President Arroyo's term until 2010, because it is constitutionally mandated, except only if she is removed by the full process of impeachment, as constitutionally mandated," she added.

Senate final battleground

Sen. Joker Arroyo said the Senate would be the final battleground in the administration efforts to amend the Constitution.

Arroyo, an administration maverick, said most of the senators believed that the concurrence of at least three-fourths of the Senate was needed for the proposal to move forward—an interpretation of the Constitution the House of Representatives disagreed with.

"A negative vote in the Senate, on the simple question of whether or not to undertake any Constitutional change at all, would write finis to Cha-cha," Arroyo said.

However, if the Senate agreed to calendar a debate on what to take up, "the debates will go on till kingdom come," Arroyo said in a speech before the Foreign Correspondents Association of the Philippines.

Diversionsary ploy

"Clearly, Charter change is nothing more than a preposterous and cynical charade being peddled to the public under the semblance of an honorable disguise," he said. "The fact is it is our path to perdition."

Sen. Richard Gordon said the hasty push for Charter change was a ploy to divert public attention away from the scandals dogging Ms Arroyo.

"There's no danger of being removed for as long as she keeps her enemy occupied ... It doesn't matter to her if she gets a parliamentary government or not. Either way, she's in a win-win situation; she'll stay in power," Gordon said.

Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. said the administration was trying "to buy time."

He said Ms Arroyo was making it appear that "the corruption of this government, cheating and many other things arise from the defects in the Constitution."

Wishful thinking

"I am afraid this talk about imposing a timeline and [insisting] that the debates on Charter change be finished by March is wishful thinking on the part of Malacañang," Senate President Franklin Drilon said.

Senate Pro Tempore Juan Flavio, a die-hard Lakas party member, also opposed the no-election proposal. He said it would be difficult to push the administration timetable.

"In the first place, you don't start by saying you will abolish the Senate and then ask the Senate to collaborate," he said.

Party-list representatives yesterday filed a resolution in the House seeking to reject any move to scrap the 2007 elections to pave the way for the institution of the proposed parliamentary system. It already has 22 signatures.

Immoral, unethical

"We cannot benefit from our own decisions," said House Minority Leader Francis Escudero. "If we agree, what will differentiate us from (Ms Arroyo) whose mandate is being questioned," he added.

Paranaque Rep. Roilo Golez, who signed the measure, said it was "immoral, unethical and illegal for members of Congress" to have "a free ride to 2010 and a seat in parliament."

The authors of the resolution included Representatives

Teodoro Casinó (Bayan Muna), Deputy Minority Leader Satur Ocampo (Bayan Muna), Joel Viador (Bayan Muna), Crispin Beltran (Anakpawis), Rafael Mariano (Kilusang Magbubukid ng Pilipinas) and Liza Maza (Gabriela).

Other representatives who have signed and expressed support for the resolution included Ronaldo Zamora (San Juan), Rolox Duplido (Iloilo), Imee Marcos (Ilocos Norte), Vincent Crisologo (Quezon City), Teofisto Guingona III (Bukidnon), Benjamin Agarao (Laguna), Baisendig Dilangalen (Maguindanao) and Juan Edgardo Angara (Aurora).

Other party-list representatives who signed were Joel Villanueva (Cibac), Renato Magtubo (Sanlakas), Mujiv Hataman (Anak Mindanao), Loretta Ann Rosales (Akbayan) and Risa Hontiveros-Baraquel (Akbayan).

stated in Republic Act No. 6735.

In March 1997, the Supreme Court rejected the petition of the People's Initiative for Reforms, Modernization and Action (Pirma) for lack of implementing guidelines.

The sources noted that Malacañang's position was that RA 6735 sufficiently implemented the right of the people to initiate amendments to the Constitution and that this was clearly the intent of then Rep. Raul Roco when he filed House Bill No. 21505, which expressly included a people's initiative to amend the Constitution.

Interim parliament

Upholding RA 6735 would be in keeping with the spirit of the 1987 Constitution which was crafted after the euphoria of Edsa revolution and explicitly recognized the power of the people, through the system of initiatives and referendum.

The sources said the interim parliament would then tackle the other amendments to the Constitution, such as lifting equity restrictions on foreign investments in select areas and the transitory provisions.

If this pushed through, the sources said the Philippines could conceivably hold its first parliamentary elections in 2007, unless the interim parliament scrapped the 2007 elections and extended the terms of elective officials by three years.

The sources explained that Malacañang had already accepted that the Senate would not agree to be abolished, as proposed by House Speaker Jose de Venecia.

Favorable arena

They described the De Venecia formula—forming a constituent assembly to tackle Charter change—as a "constitutional coup" that was doomed to fail because of the proponent's brazen move to grab power.

The sources said that Malacañang was betting that the Supreme Court was a more favorable battleground for Charter change than the Senate.

By the end of the year, Ms Arroyo would have 11 appointees in the 15-member high court.

Although administration lawyers believe that having one item in the initiative means a "simplified approach," constitutional experts do not share this thinking.

The experts, including INQUIRER columnist Fr. Joaquin Bernas, have said that a people's initiative cannot be resorted to in a major constitutional restructuring, such as adopting the parliamentary system because of its wide ramifications.

The people's initiative is being carried out by the Union of Local Authorities of the Philippines headed by Gov. Ben Evardone of Eastern Samar. Where it will get the money to do so, without Senate approval, is also an issue raised by critics.

At the 7th Triennial Conference of the Asia-Pacific Operational Research Societies at the Dusit Hotel Nikko in Makati

City yesterday, Ms Arroyo reiterated her desire to pursue Charter change as part of the strategic objectives of her "ambitious but achievable" plan for the year.

People tired of politics

"The people are tired of political noise and showing mistrust on politicians but they are anticipating fundamental changes," Ms Arroyo said.

Vice President Noli de Castro said he would agree to the administration timeline if the people would approve it. De Castro joined the President in inspecting the areas cleared by authorities in preparation for the South railway rehabilitation.

"For me, it's the people who should decide, not us politicians," he said.

But De Castro advocated a strong information-education campaign, particularly on what changes are to be made to the 19-year-old Constitution. With reports from Christine O. Avendaño and Michael Lim Ubac

MICHAEL DEFENSOR BEGINS today his new job as Chief of Staff for President Macapagal-Arroyo.

His entry comes at a time when the Arroyo administration is set to effect Charter changes in the middle of the year.

But since his appointment papers have yet to be released sometime this week, Defensor said he considers himself an "officer in charge (OIC)."

He said he was taking an indefinite leave as Secretary of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources "pending the issuance of my appointment papers and the Executive Order defining the functions" of his new position.

"I will be handling the schedule of the President and some of her personal and official concerns," Defensor told the INQUIRER when asked about his new job, which he started two weeks ago on top of his position as DENR secretary.

He said he was responsible for the schedule of the President, attending to her flagship programs, which included poverty alleviation programs.

Two weeks ago, Defensor joined the weekly briefing of Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita, and took charge of explaining the subsidized rice and noodles program as well as the relocation program of residents affected by the rehabilitation of the North and South Railways.

Yesterday, Defensor joined Ms Arroyo when she inspected the areas in the South railway that were cleared by the National Housing Authority in preparation for the modernization of the Philippine National Railway tracks.

Raps filed vs top exec in tax scam

By Nelson F. Flores

THE OFFICE OF THE OMBUDSMAN LAST Friday filed graft and falsification charges against a former ranking finance official and five others in connection with the alleged granting of a tax credit certificate (TCC) to an unqualified transport company.

Acting Deputy Special Prosecutor Humphrey Monteroso accused former Finance Assistant Secretary Antonio Belicena of causing the issuance of a TCC to St. Rose Transit Inc. on Jan. 2, 1996, for the sum of P1.76 million despite discrepancies in the documents submitted by the bus firm.

St. Rose Transit reportedly claimed tax privileges for two buses it had bought from Philippine Automotive Manufacturing Corp. (Pamcor). Graft investigators found the vehicles' invoice to be spurious and their prices overstated.

The Ombudsman said Pamcor was not entitled to tax privileges because the transport firm was a dealer and not a manufacturer, hence, the purchase was not covered by the Omnibus Investment Code of 1987 which defines the parameters for the grant of a TCC.

Investigators discovered that the invoice presented to support the tax claim had in fact been issued by Pamcor not to St. Rose Transit but to Diamond Motors Corp., a Pamcor authorized dealer.

The actual date of the invoice was Oct. 26, 1994, and not July 22, 1995, as the claimant made it appear.

Also, the real price per unit was P4.25 million and not P4.89 million, the figure the tax credit claim was based on.

Prosecutors said the discrepancies were "glaring and obvious," something the accused finance officials should have known when they granted the tax privilege to St. Rose Transit.

Aside from Belicena, charged were One-Stop Shop Inter-Agency Tax Credit and Drawback Center Deputy Executive Director Uldarico Andutan, Net Local Content Center officer in charge Raul de Vera, senior tax specialist Rosanna Dila, St. Rose Transit president Aladin Simundac and a Joseph Cabotaje whose designation was not given.

Capalla proposes setting up of bishops-mediemen's confab

By Christian V. Esguerra

ONE OF THE MOST CRITICIZED CATHOLIC Church leaders wants an unusual tie-up between bishops and members of the media.

Davao Archbishop Fernando Capalla yesterday suggested the establishment of a Bishops-Mediemen's Conference, similar to the prelates' existing organization with business leaders.

Capalla made the proposal amid complaints by a number of his peers that the media were properly reporting the church hierarchy's activities and position on various issues.

Capalla himself has been criticized by some quarters, including some clergymen, for his allegedly passive stand on political issues during his term as president of the Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines. Some critics connected this stance to his supposed close ties to President Macapagal-Arroyo, widely seen as having benefited from the CBCP's refusal to join calls for the President's resignation at the height of the "Hello Garci" scandal.

Capalla came up with the proposed conference, ostensibly convinced that a problem of "misunderstanding" existed between the media and the bishops.

Quoting Pope John Paul II's World Communications Day message in 1999, he said: "At times, relations between the Church and the media can be marred by mutual misunderstanding which breeds fear and mistrust."

In Capalla's mind, a conference would allow bishops and journalists to learn from one another.

From bishops, journalists could "learn the art of being human, of being a believer, of being a cultural person, of being a true Filipino," according to Capalla. Bishops, in turn, could "begin to know and understand the journalism profession and social communications as an important aspect of social life in a democracy."

Total, Seoil also raise gas prices

By Abigail L. Ho

FOLLOWING THE LEAD OF ITS COMPETITORS, finished product importer Total (Philippines) Corp. yesterday raised the prices of its gasoline, diesel and kerosene by 50 centavos a liter and of its liquefied petroleum gas by 50 centavos per kilogram.

The increase took effect at 12:01 a.m. yesterday, the same time as Seoil Petroleum Corp. and a day behind the other oil firms.

Total officials said prices were adjusted to "partially reflect the increase in international oil prices."

Iran's recent threat to revive its nuclear fuel research program sent shivers through the world oil market, government energy officials had said earlier.

According to Department of Energy data, the regional benchmark Dubai crude jumped by close to $4 a barrel to a January average of $56.90 a barrel from last month's $53.20 a barrel.

The price of unleaded gasoline based on the Mean of Platts Singapore (MOPS) benchmark for refined petroleum products had likewise surged to $66.29 in the first 13 days of January, an increase of almost $5 from the $61.01-a-barrel average posted last month.

MOPS-based diesel also skyrocketed to an average of $71.76 a barrel in the Jan. 1-13 period from $67.03 a barrel in December.

The international contract price of LPG shot up to an all-time high of $582 per metric ton (MT), rising by $44 from the December average of $538 per MT.

The price hike brings the pump prices per liter of unleaded premium gasoline to between P36.15 and P37.40, of diesel to between P29.90 and P33.65, and of kerosene to between P32.65 and P35.80. The company said diesel discounts for public utility vehicles would continue at selected Total stations.

"Through closer interaction with media practitioners, bishops can also begin to understand the constraints on reporters, for instance, or story needs of media outlets - and dovetail these with the communication needs of the Church."

1st Reading: 1 S 16:1-13
Gospel: Mark 2:23-28

One Sabbath he was walking through grainfields. As his disciples walked along with him, they began to pick the heads of grain and crush them in their hands. Then the Pharisees said to Jesus, "Look! they are doing what is forbidden on the Sabbath!"

And he said to them, "Have you never read what David did in his time of need, when he and his men were very hungry? He went into the house of God when Abiathar was High Priest and ate the bread of offering, which only the priests are allowed to eat, and he also gave some to the men who were with him." Then Jesus said to them, "The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. So the Son of Man is master even of the Sabbath."

Commentary
Samuel grieves for Saul, but is commanded to look for another among the sons of Jesse. He is looking into the heart of all his sons, and the last is David, the shepherd. He anoints him and the Spirit of God rushes upon him. God sees not as we see. Jesus walks through standing grain on the Sabbath and lets his disciples chew on the heads of grain. When he is rebuked he compares himself to David who fed his men when they were in need by going into the temple and taking the holy bread that belonged only to the priests. He continues by saying that the Sabbath and all the laws are made for human beings' life, and that we are not made for the laws. He calls himself the Son of Man who is lord of the Sabbath, and all life.

US senators: Don't rule out military strike on Iran

WASHINGTON—REPUBLICAN AND DEMOCRATIC SENATORS said on Sunday the United States may ultimately have to undertake a military strike to deter Iran from obtaining nuclear weapons, but that should be the last resort.

"That is the last option. Everything else has to be exhausted. But to say under no circumstances would we exercise a military option, that would be crazy," Republican Sen. John McCain of Arizona said on CBS's "Face the Nation."

Democratic Sen. Evan Bayh of Indiana, a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said there are sensitive elements of Iran's nuclear program, which, if attacked, "would dramatically delay its development."

"But that should not be an option at this point. We ought to use everything else possible keep from getting to that juncture," he said on CNN's "Late Edition."

A growing nuclear fracas exploded last week when Iran, defying the United States and major European powers, resumed nuclear research after a two-year moratorium.

Iran says it aims only to make power for an energy-needy economy, not build atom bombs. But it hid nuclear work from the UN nuclear watchdog agency for almost 20 years before exiled dissidents exposed it in 2002.

On Sunday, Iran said that only diplomacy, not threats to refer it to the UN Security Council, could defuse a standoff over its nuclear work and warned that any Western push for sanctions could jack up world oil prices.

The Security Council's five permanent members and Germany planned talks in London on Monday on a common strategy to tackle the controversy.

McCain called the nuclear standoff "the most grave situation that we have faced since the end of the Cold War, absent the whole war on terror."

Indonesian girl dies of bird flu; 2 siblings also infected

JAKARTA—A 13-YEAR-OLD Indonesian girl died of bird flu at the weekend while two of her siblings have tested positive for the H5N1 virus, a health ministry official said on Monday, citing the results of local tests.

"We found three positive bird flu cases in one family coming from Indramayu, West Java," said Hariadi Wibisono, the ministry's director of control of animal-borne diseases.

He said this was Indonesia's fifth cluster of bird flu cases, where people living in close proximity had fallen ill.

There was no evidence of human-to-human transmission and dead chickens had been found in the neighborhood, he added.

The H5N1 virus is not known to pass easily between humans at the moment, but experts fear it could develop that ability and set off a global pandemic that might kill millions of people.

If confirmed by outside laboratories recognized by the World Health Organization (WHO), the latest cases would take total known deaths in Indonesia from avian flu to 13 and the number who have had bird flu to 20.

Wibisono said the girl died in an Indramayu hospital while her 15-year-old sister and 3-year-old brother had been sent to a hospital in Jakarta designated to care for bird flu patients.

Indramayu is 175 km east of Jakarta.

"A lot of fowls died around the neighborhood where they lived. But we don't know yet whether these fowls were carrying the virus. We sent a team there to investigate this morning," he said, adding that anyone who has had close contact with the children will be tested.

A WHO spokesperson in Jakarta said she was not aware if a team from the world body would go to Indramayu, but added WHO officials usually joined such investigations with the Health Ministry.

The highly pathogenic strain of bird flu is endemic in poultry in parts of Asia, and has affected birds in two-thirds of the provinces in Indonesia, an archipelago of about 17,000 islands and 220 million people.

The country has millions of chickens and ducks, many in the yards of rural or urban homes, raising the risk of more humans becoming infected with a virus that is confirmed to have killed 79 people in six countries since late 2003.

This includes recent cases in Turkey, the first human infections outside East Asia.

Experts say the H5N1 virus could become more active in the colder months in affected regions.

Sharon blinks while listening to tape

JERUSALEM—Ariel Sharon blinked his eyes Monday as a tape of his grandson was being played but medics said it was too early to assess its significance. A spokesperson for the Hadassah hospital said members of the family spotted the 77-year-old Israeli premier blinking. Medical sources said Sharon had appeared to shed a tear while listening to the tape. On Sunday, doctors performed a tracheotomy on Sharon in order to assist his breathing. Medical sources have been increasingly pessimistic about his chances of making a recovery the longer he remained in a coma. Chief neurosurgeon Dr. Felix Umansky said Sunday patience was needed and the tracheotomy was not a sign his condition was worsening. AFP

Bomb attack kills Canadian envoy

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan—A Taliban bomb attack on a Canadian military convoy killed a Canadian diplomat and at least two Afghans in the heart of the southern Afghan city of Kandahar on Sunday, officials said. Canadian officials said it appeared the convoy of armored vehicles was attacked by a suicide bomber, and that three soldiers were wounded. The diplomat, 59-year-old Glyn Berry, was a veteran foreign affairs official who was posted to Afghanistan last August. Reuters

Osama has 'ceased to be important'

MADRID—Fugitive al-Qaida leader Osama bin Laden has "ceased to be important," with the movement he created posing a far greater threat, respected British Middle East correspondent Robert Fisk told Spanish daily El Pais in an interview published Sunday. "To look for Bin Laden now is as useful as detaining nuclear scientists after the creation of the atomic bomb," said Fisk, who will visit Spain on Tuesday to publicize a new book on the region. "Bin Laden has ceased to be important," insisted Fisk, who has interviewed the Saudi-born terror mastermind three times. "Yet we are still following the Hollywoodesque vision of the existence of Bin Laden. Is he alive? When will they catch him?" opined Fisk, correspondent with The Independent newspaper. "Bin Laden created al-Qaida. His work is done. Would it change anything if he were captured?" Fisk asked rhetorically. AFP

'Dead man' walking triggers panic

NEW DELHI—An Indian man believed dead by his family and fellow villagers caused panic when he returned over fears he had come back as a ghost, the Times of India reported on Monday. Children screamed "Ghost! Ghost!" and villagers locked their doors when Raju Raghuvanshi returned from jail earlier this month to his village in Mandla district in the central state of Madhya Pradesh. Raghuvanshi's brothers, who had shaved their heads to mourn his death in line with Hindu tradition, fled when he appeared, the paper reported. Villagers and family members have ostracized him, forcing Raghuvanshi to file a complaint with local police. The village council has demanded he prove he is not a ghost, but the paper did not say what kind of proof the elders wanted. Reuters

Socialist elected Chile's first woman president

SANTIAGO, CHILE—CHILE ELECTED socialist Michelle Bachelet to be its first woman president on Sunday, making her only the second woman elected to head a South American state as Latin America cements a shift to the left.

With almost all votes counted, Bachelet, from Chile's ruling center-left coalition, won 53 percent of ballots cast while opposition candidate Sebastian Pinera took 47 percent, the government Electoral Service said.

Bachelet, 54, a medical doctor imprisoned and tortured during the 1973-1990 Augusto Pinochet dictatorship before living in exile abroad, will be the fourth consecutive president from the center-left alliance that has run Chile since 1990.

"Violence came into my life, destroying what I loved, because I was a victim of hate," Bachelet told tens of thousands of confetti-tossing supporters along the main boulevard in downtown Santiago.

"I have dedicated my life to reversing that hate and converting it into understanding, tolerance and, why not say it, love."

A former defense minister, Bachelet is only the second woman elected to head a South American nation after Janet Jagan of Guyana was chosen to succeed her husband as president in 1997 after he died.

"I feel emotional, happy. We are breathing the air of liberty and unity," said Ana Paredes, 37, a hotel employee who said she spontaneously decided to join Bachelet revelers.

The celebration extended well into the night with jubilant supporters honking their car horns and shaking giant flags.

Bachelet, an agnostic with three children from two relationships, benefited from a shift to more secular values in Chile, which until recently had a reputation as one of the region's most socially conservative countries.

She pledged during her victory speech to bring more social equality to Chile by the time her four-year term ends in 2010, with social security and equal educational opportunities for all. "I want my government to be remembered as a government for everybody," she said.

Political scientist Ricardo Israel said a main challenge for her will be to bring more women into public office, and to find a place for her social-democratic coalition within the range of leftist governments taking hold in Latin America.

Israel said she would have to balance the need to maintain good global relations, particularly with the United States so Chile can keep benefiting from global free trade, while guaranteeing a steady natural gas supply from its neighbors.

A Bachelet victory consolidates a shift to the left in Latin America, where leftists now run Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay and Venezuela, some with politics more extreme than others. A socialist will soon take office in gas-rich Bolivia, and leftist Evo Morales is favored to win Mexico's July presidential election.

Brain chemical could be useful in fighting obesity

PARIS—SCIENTISTS IN THE UNITED STATES say they have identified a compound in the brain that appears to play a key role in the drive to eat and could prove a useful weapon in the combat against obesity.

The chemical, a fatty acid called malonyl coenzyme A, is produced in the hypothalamus—a part of the brain which receives signals from the digestive system about the body's nutritional state and which initiates the desire to eat or stop eating.

The team used a deactivated cold virus to deliver into the brains of lab rats an enzyme that degrades malonyl coenzyme A.

Levels of the fatty acid fell, prompting the rats to gobble up more food and become obese, roughly doubling in body weight over the course of the 18-week experiment.

The implication is that people who have insufficient levels of malonyl coenzyme A may become unrestrained eaters, according to the study, which is published online on Sunday in the specialist journal Nature Neuroscience.

Boosting levels of it could help them to eat moderately, it suggests.

The authors are led by Luciano Rossetti of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York.

The research adds to previous studies, all in the early phase, that have pinpointed hormones that suppress or stimulate appetites.

Medical tourism

THE MEDICAL TOURISM PROGRAM LAUNCHED last week may yet help relieve the brain drain in the health professionals sector and at the same time earn a lot of dollars for the country. But the program has to be well managed to ensure that it does not adversely affect the health program for poor Filipinos and result in the exploitation of people ready to sell parts of their body for money.

EDITORIAL Health Undersecretary Jade del Mundo has said that the program would put the Philippines on the world stage of medical tourism. India, Thailand, Malaysia and Singapore are ahead of the Philippines in medical tourism, but it should not be difficult for the country to catch up, given the competent health professionals it has, its international image as a caring and compassionate nation and its very reasonable and competitive medical rates. Also a plus is the fact that most of our health professionals are proficient in English.

A heart bypass here costs only about P500,000, or about half the price abroad. A kidney transplant costs P3 million, or less than half the rate in other Asian or Western countries. Even cosmetic surgical procedures are cheaper here. For example, blepharoplasty, which widens the contours of Asian eyes, would cost about P500,000 in Japan and South Korea, but only P150,000 in the Philippines.

Medical tourism has a dual purpose: people would visit another country to get medical treatment and enjoy a vacation in the process. This new kind of tourism promises to be a lucrative dollar earner for the Philippines. Dr. Joseph James Joaquin, a plastic surgeon, said that in Thailand in 2004 the medical tourism industry drew 600,000 foreign tourists and earned nearly $500 million for the country.

Tourists would be ready to pay high professional fees, and so doctors, nurses and other medical professionals who are thinking of working abroad could be convinced to stay in the Philippines. Later they could pool their savings and set up clinics and hospitals of their own. Other doctors and nurses already working abroad could be enticed to return to the country if they could earn better pay so that they could be near their families at the same time.

The medical tourism program could also help promote indigenous medical and therapeutic practices, such as hilot. This type of Filipino massage has therapeutic benefits and, properly promoted, could compete with the world-famous Thai massage.

There are certain caveats, however. The Alliance of Health Workers, through a spokesperson, said that the program, which would offer world-class health care to foreigners, could aggravate the neglect of poor Filipino patients. Millions of them now have to content themselves with substandard treatment and obsolete equipment in government hospitals and clinics.

Another danger is that the program could result in the "mutilation" of hundreds, if not thousands, of poor Filipinos who would sell kidneys and other vital organs for big sums of money. In 2003, 420 kidney transplants were done locally. About 250 of the kidneys came from donors not related to the recipients, and most of the donors were paid. The selling of kidneys is a booming business in Rizal Park, Bacood and Baseco compound in Manila, Novaliches in Quezon City and Addition Hills in Mandaluyong, according to Dr. Angeles Tan Alora, a bioethics expert.

What if the donors who are left with only one kidney each later suffer kidney failure? Would not the government and society spend more to solve the new problem?

What makes medical tourism an attractive program all over the world is the money. Del Mundo, citing figures from the International Trade Center Geneva, said that the global medical tourism industry earns about $20 billion a year. The Philippine government expects to earn $300 million in the first year of operation of the medical tourism program and $1 billion a year for the next five years.

If the program does stem the brain drain in the health professionals sector and brings in the tourist dollars, well and good. But safeguards have to be taken to ensure that it does not result in the neglect of poor Filipino patients and in the exploitation of poor people who might be enticed to give up some of their vital organs in exchange for dollars.

More bang for the buck and demand was high," the study found.

But Day Care Mother services smashed into a cultural wall. Filipino parents entrust infants and very young children only to immediate relatives. So, only 2 percent used a project where volunteers care for children while their mothers worked.

"Adam and Eve had many advantages, but the principal one was they escaped teething," Mark Twain once joked. But multiple health needs of children are a major concern for mothers. Seven out of 10 sought rural health midwives for vaccination, breast-feeding, use of fortified foods, etc.

The most cost-effective health packages, where each child got four vaccines, were: Bacolod City at P10.22 per child and Jordan, Guimaras, at P30.29. Least cost-effective were Iligan City, at P1,287.99 per child; Alimodian, Iloilo, at P297.53; and Kidapawan City in Cotabato at P140.10.

For a kid to get Vitamin A and iron supplements in Jordan, Guimaras, cost P21.60 and in Carcar, Cebu, P33.38. But in Iligan, Lanao del Norte, the bill was P799.05 per child, and in Alimodian, Iloilo, P268.96.

The study found that 79 percent of mothers "spent their own money to avail themselves of these packages." The average expenditure was P7,738.17 per household.

The breakdown indicates the priorities of families: (a) P6,213.12 for micronutrient supplements and fortified foodstuff; (b) P1,433.84 for Day Care Centers; and (c) P91.21 for vaccination, neonatal care, etc.

Similar variations occurred in per head cost. "Most cost-effective, by this indicator, were

DID THE BANG MATCH THE BUCKS? THEY did in Bacolod City, Jordan in Guimaras and Carcar in Cebu. That's where the local governments delivered in programs to tackle malnutrition that devastate vulnerable kids in poverty-strapped families. A new Philippine Women's University study reached that conclusion after analyzing the cost-effectiveness of government's six year (1998-2004) "Early Childhood Development Project."

No one dies of starvation here. But many shrivel from chronic hunger and diseases like tuberculosis or blindness. One out of three of over 9.1 million school kids are underweight, nutrition surveys show.

Protein energy malnutrition ushers more Filipino pre-school children to premature graves than in lower-income countries like Bangladesh, Kenya or Tanzania, the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank noted in a joint study, "Early Childhood Development."

PWU surveyed 17 of the first 132 LGUs that signed up to provide quick and sustained delivery of services, from food enrichment packages to day-care workers. "It takes a village to raise a child," the African proverb says.

Dr. Romeo Geocolea, Winona Pasimio, Nenita Cura and Ligaya Braganza interviewed 1,200 mothers, caregivers and local officials to determine: (a) do families seek such services? (b) were they cost-effective? and (c) can they be sustained?

"This ... is one of the best investments government made in the last decade," says Dr. Geocolea. "It delivered life-saving and development-enhancing services" for school children in areas afflicted by scandalously high death rates and ill health.

"LGUs plowed in substantial proportions of their meager internal revenue allotments or pork barrel to keep services for their children going," adds this former United Nations Development Program official.

words. What I do recall is his outrage and indignation that such things should exist in this country, "short time" being, he said, an aid, or encouragement, to illicit affairs.

He wanted the practice stopped, spreading as it did the plague of immorality upon the land. He wanted "short time" abolished from the face of the earth, or at least Metro Manila, and establishments offering the same to be shut down and their owners given long time in prison.

I wouldn't have given that more than passing thought either if I did not remember that government and church officials periodically complain about movie and TV fare, and more recently about the ads in the media, including the billboards that now bedeck, or obstruct, the capital city's skyline. The complaints normally have to do with the suggestive poses of the models there, or the same models' obsession to show their bodies in the near-pristine state God made them.

Being near-blind to ads (I don't know but for some reason I completely overlook them in newspapers and TV), I must confess I have not noticed a marked increase in the quantity and quality of the well, boldness. I do know that FHM and rival publications are competing ferociously in the skin trade, but have not given much thought to it, knowing that bolder stuff is easily available in, and accessible through, the Internet. And who can navigate their way there with the skill and boldness of Columbus than the kids?

But I will not go into whether pornography is besieging us and constitutes a dire threat. I am just amazed that the officials above should espy obscenity in nubile bodies, in suggestive projects in Bacolod City at P16.83 per capita; Cadiz City, at P27.75; and Jordan at P33.88." In contrast, "LGUs with the highest costs were Lala, Lanao del Norte, at P532.81 per capita; Alimodian, Iloilo, at P227.65; and Pilar, Capiz, at P202.41."

Implementation rates differed too. "Gungahon" Kidapawan City in Cotabato notched up over 100 percent. Ten of the 17 LGUs started their programs only after 2000.

"The three highest implementation rates were achieved by Kidapawan, Cotabato, at 115 percent; Buenavista, Guimaras, at 89 and Passi City, Iloilo, at 69," the report notes. "Lowest implementation rates were registered by Cadiz City at 33 percent and Tagbilaran City at 37."

How much LGUs spend differs, too. Bais City allocated P11.63 million, while Jordan spent the lowest at P1.07 million. In Lanao del Norte, Iligan City spent P10.5 million and Lala P7.2 million, while Banga, Aklan, disbursed P2.3 million.

Seven LGUs had "unclassified costs" that exceeded 10 percent of the total bill: Cadiz City and Banga, Aklan, over 45 percent; Sibalom, Antique, 40 percent; Balete, Aklan, 23 percent; Passi, Iloilo, 17 percent; Pilar, Capiz, 12 percent; and Buenavista, Guimaras, 11 percent.

Future early childhood projects need to improve their information reporting systems. And there's need to use mass communications better. Above all, effective ways adopted by Bacolod, Jordan and Carcar should be replicated.

LGUs can sustain programs for their own deprived children. Some beefed up their counterparts from "pork barrel" funds, bilateral or NGO aid, and barangay revenues. Except for the mayor of Buenavista, all agreed that they could carry on programs for the vulnerable kids even after national funds are cut.

These deprived kids are more important than those strutting politicians. "If you bungle raising your children," Jacqueline Kennedy once said, "whatever else you do will not matter very much."

(E-mail: juan_mercado@pacific.net.ph)

poses or not, and sex, illicit or not, and fail to be assailed by a more humongous obscenity that stares us in the face and constitutes the greatest scourge this country has ever been threatened with.

At the time Lagman complained of what "short time" in motels was doing to the morals of the youth, or not-so-youth, he had just helped mightily to stop a usurper in Malacañang from being removed. He and the votes-for-hire in Congress conspired to defeat a move to impeach GMA, for which (mis)deed he was dropped by the Liberal Party from its roster. Indeed, at the time he exoriated "short time," his daughter had just been named by Archbishop Oscar Cruz's witnesses as a beneficiary of jueteng.

Indeed, at the time all of them were complaining about these obscenities, the arguments in defense of the usurper in Malacañang had sunk to, "So GMA cheated in the elections, so what?" which was being peddled in media as though it were the most natural thing in the world. Nestor Torre would observe the effects of this thinking in the entertainment world. A couple of weeks ago, he reported that musicians who were accused of plagiarism had this ready argument: "We did not do it. But even if we did, so what?" In this country, disrobing in public and exchanging body fluids in private has become a crime, but stealing the vote and passing other people's work as one's own has become a yawn.

I remember that one of the first things Marcos did after he declared martial law was to shut down the publications that exposed female bodies along with the publications that exposed his wrongdoing, and the bold movies that proliferated then, which ended Merle Fernandez's (the original bold star), well, budding, career. And the martial-law government proclaimed victoriously that at last this country had rid itself of all obscenity.

You couldn't have had anything more deeply upright and more deeply crooked then. You can't have anything more deeply upright and more deeply crooked now.

Senators concerned with self-preservation

YESTERDAY'S INQUIRER BANNER STORY SAID it all. It quoted Sen. Joker Arroyo as saying that the Lakas "troika" of leaders "mistakenly believes that senators would agree to write their own obituary." It's obvious that some senators are stonewalling the growing clamor for Charter change because their chamber would face extinction. Their instinct for self-preservation and survival is blinding them to the merits of the system that has more following around the world than the one we have.

This week, the Senate makes an effort to address Charter change, with hearings commencing in Sen. Richard Gordon's committee on electoral laws and constitutional amendments. The issues are House resolution calling for a constituent assembly and a Senate resolution calling for a constitutional convention. I suspect, however, that such moves would be token and the hearings would be interminable. The senators also know there are no funds for a constitutional convention, what with three elections scheduled for next year. But they could find themselves isolated from the rest of the country.

The absence from the national directorate caucus of six Lakas senators—Juan Flavio, Pia Cayetano, Ramon Magsaysay Jr., Richard Gordon, Ramon Revilla and Lito Lapid—was not just a "bad omen," as House Majority Leader Prospero Nograles put it. With the six not offering any explanation for not showing up, it's a clear signal that they don't want to go against the sentiment of their colleagues. This is shortsighted thinking, though, for under the proposed changes, both chambers would give way to a single legislature that will be less expensive and more dynamic and proactive. Nothing can prevent the senators from running for the bicameral legislature, especially those with district backing, such as Edgardo Angara, Juan Ponce Enrile, Aquilino Pimentel, Manuel Villar, Ralph Recto and Lito Lapid. We hope they will be more open to Charter change.

Having just one legislative chamber is the most popular argument for a shift to a parliamentary/unicameral form. Right now we citizens are footing a very expensive bill to maintain the two chambers: for the House with 236 members, P2.8 billion, and for the Senate with 24 members, P1.6 billion. The P4.4 billion does not include their pork barrel with P200 million going to every senator and P40 million to every House member.

POLITICAL TIDBITS

Belinda Olivares-Cunanan

Just as bad is the gridlock perpetually afflicting both chambers, as shown by the fact that the Senate passed only four bills last year. Such gridlock happens between the executive and the legislative branches in a presidential system, unlike in a parliamentary system where members of the Cabinet come from parliament. This explains why in countries that have a parliamentary delivery of programs is much faster and more efficient.

There is also need to reform some economic provisions of the 1987 Constitution to put us on a more competitive footing with our neighbors in Southeast Asia. Over 50 years of the presidential system have failed to take us out of economic underdevelopment.

With the Senate determined to block Charter change, its proponents, led by President Macapagal-Arroyo and Speaker Jose de Venecia, have firmed up various plans to push it. Other political parties and groups are being sought out for support, including the Nationalist People's Coalition under Deputy Speaker Emilio Espinosa and Reps. Gilbert Teodoro, Jesli Lapus and Frisco San Juan; Kampi under Reps. Luis Villafuerte, Vic Sumulong and Ronaldo Puno; the Liberal Party faction under Mayor Joselito Atienza; and the Social Democrats led by National Security Adviser Norberto Gonzalez. Various members of civil society are also gearing for the Cha-cha campaign.

For the proponents, the timetable is to have the seven constitutional amendments approved in last Saturday's Lakas caucus pushed either through a constituent assembly or a people's initiative. This means continuing the massive information drive kicked off by the Constitutional Consultative Commission, this time spearheaded by local government officials. Between June 7 to 15, a plebiscite is proposed to be held wherein the people will be asked to answer if they approve the amendments and if they want the elections of all parliamentary members in May 2007 or May 2010. The plebiscite questions, if answered in the affirmative, would result in the abolition of Congress and the emergence of an interim parliament whose members would be drawn from Congress. By 2007 or 2010, depending on what the people approve, the election of members of the new parliament would take place and the president will be reduced to a "ceremonial leader" as the prime minister wields real power.

With their "never-say-die-spirit," the proponents will move Charter change simultaneously on two fronts: in Congress, through efforts to convene as a constituent assembly, and at the grassroots, through a people's initiative by gathering 5 million signatures that will represent 12 percent of all registered voters, with at least 3 percent coming from each legislative district. Both moves, however, face difficult roadblocks. The constituent assembly needs both the House and the Senate to get into the act—either voting jointly by a ¾ vote or separately, as intended by the drafters of the Constitution, as some legal luminaries argue. This issue could end up in the Supreme Court.

On the other hand, the people's initiative to be spearheaded by various organizations of local officials could also be blocked in the SC. Recall that the effort of Pirma to launch a similar people's initiative in 1997 was thrown out by a vote of 8-6 and later 7-7 because of the absence of an enabling law. Significantly, two justices who voted favorably for Pirma are still in the Court: Chief Justice Artemio Panganiban and Justice Reynato Puno.

Hope and health from far away

THOUGH I PUT IN SOME CAUTIONARY WORDS about medical missions in a recent column on "medical tourism," the truth is that these may sometimes be necessary in a health environment, such as that obtaining here, with a severe shortage of health professionals, inadequate health infrastructure and massive poverty.

And if these medical missions are carried out by groups like the Philippine-American Group of Educators and Surgeons Pages, based in New Jersey, then such charitable endeavors would surely be of help in alleviating the poor health conditions of the populace.

In a recent issue of The Filipino Reporter, news editor Edmund Silvestre featured the organization that, he says, he learned about only by accident. "The group—composed of successful Filipinos who are either retired or simply have made this mission a public service commitment—is really a role model for Filipino organizations across the US and maybe the world. For the past 15 years, they (have worked) hard and (worked) quietly and have no time for petty quarrels or bickering or jealousy which normally mar many organizations here."

Pages, says Silvestre, launches medical missions in the Philippines every year and donates medical equipment to various public hospitals here, mostly in rural areas in Luzon and the Visayas. In fact, the next Pages mission has been scheduled for next month in Bay, Laguna, and in Cavite.

Following are excerpts from Silvestre's article in The Filipino Reporter:

EAST ORANGE, N.J.—Vid Figueras knows he cannot save the world, but his humanitarian group known as Pages—Philippine American Group of Educators and Surgeons—has treated over 6,000 Filipino children and young adults for the past 15 years through its Operation HOPE (Helping Other People Excel).

"Our main goal is simply to help, without expecting anything in return," Figueras, founding chair, said as he and fellow volunteers inventoried a two-story warehouse full of donated medical items that will be shipped to the Philippines ... in time for their February 2006 medical mission in Bay, a third-class municipality in Laguna, with 15 poor barangays.

"The Philippines is in crisis and many people there need assistance," said Figueras, a native of Imus, Cavite, and who is also special assistant to the Cavite governor (Ayong Maliksi) on health issues. "I have seen the extent of the health crisis there and one way to help ease the problem is by doing what I call a mass production of help."

The large warehouse, located within a private East Orange, New Jersey, compound owned by retired engineer and Pages supply coordinator Douglas Malazzo, houses hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of medicines and medical equipment, including a dozen used anesthesia machines worth $50,000 each, examination tables, electric wheelchairs, dental chairs, and operating room lights that will eventually go to needy provincial or municipal hospitals.

"So far, we have donated 20 anesthesia machines to several hospitals, and numerous other equipment as well, donated by groups like SOS and the Doctor Dealer Foundation," Figueras said.

The warehouse also keeps boxes of medical books, canned goods, and all kinds of stuffed toys used to comfort children who will undergo surgery. Beside the warehouse is a large (cargo) container filled with more donated items like surgical gloves, suction catheter, antibiotics and other medicines.

"We have enough supply here," Figueras assured. "We can even supply medical gloves to the entire Philippines if we want to."

OPERATION HOPE was inspired by the international program called "Operation Smile," of which Figueras, a registered nurse, was a member since 1983, along with American surgeons that go to different poor countries to offer free medical services.

Figueras said that when "Operation Smile" stopped its Philippine program for two years in (the 1990s) due to political and peace and order problems, he formed Pages and its Operation HOPE, as well as Operation Grace (food and gift-giving during missions); and Operation Education (seminars and teaching sessions for medical students and practitioners, including nurses).

Over the years, Pages managed to attract—often by word of mouth—not only Filipino-American physician volunteers but also their American and British counterparts.

One of them is Dr. Peter Ayliffe, a world-renowned British reconstructive surgeon, who's been involved with the group for the past six years.

"These are respectable plastic surgeons and educators who earn good money," Figueras said. "They do pure volunteer work and pay their own way to the Philippines every year ... operating nonstop from 5 a.m. to 8 p.m. for five straight days a week."

Pages is supported by three businessmen-philanthropists—a Chinese, a Jew and an American—who believe in the group's noble cause. "But no names please," Figueras requested. "These are very private people who regularly assist people from poor nations."

Donations of medical supplies come from foundations and medical groups and individuals from places like Ohio, Kentucky, South Carolina, New Jersey and New York, as well as hospitals which upgrade their equipment and donate the used ones to Pages.

Figueras said all donated medical equipment are evaluated by a US-trained biomedical engineer before being put to use.

"Donations that come from three states alone can fill up two 40-foot containers," Figueras said. The latest donors were Dr. Mark Kaster of Toms River Community Hospital in South Jersey, who gave nine used anesthesia machines; and Nanding and Mila Mendez, producers of the annual Philippine Fiesta in New Jersey, who donated $4,000.

Romance of old houses

SENSE AND SENSIBILITY

Bambi L. Harper

DURING ONE OF MY OUT-OF-TOWN TRIPS TO do research on the province of Batangas, I was asked by my guide what I found interesting about dilapidated old houses that were falling apart. Of course, I told her about hardwood and how it was difficult to come by these days as well as the intricacy of the carvings that would cost a fortune to have made today. I didn't say that one has to have a fanciful turn of mind, not quite grounded in reality because I was afraid she would laugh.

With a creak of a floorboard or the sigh of the wind in the old trees in the yard, old houses whisper of past lives. They speak of children scurrying up the stairs, of servants cooking in clay kalans, of kitchen floors made of bamboo slats and of forgotten architects whose names will never now be known. Who are these ghosts of the past?

You may find some answers in the architectural section of archival documents or in last wills and testaments, perhaps in 19th century magazines like La Ilustracion Filipina. Unfortunately for us, there is no way to check today whether those architectural drawings ever became a reality, considering that what wasn't bombed during the war we decided to demolish. Manila, despite being the oldest capital, isn't exactly friendly toward the past. There are some inventories of household goods in last wills and testaments kept in the National Archives, but since the houses are all gone, there's no way for us to imagine what their interiors looked like.

Perhaps the province may prove easier than Manila since the chain of ownership may still be traced in public records or last wills or even oral reminiscences of relatives and old neighbors that may tell you about family feuds or inventories of furnishings. But don't you find it amazing how few families have kept albums of photographs or old letters or even old recipes?

Since we are a superstitious people, any house that has a reputation of being haunted (and this doesn't even have to be 100 years old) has less of a chance of being sold. Or if it is, it would be torn down and a new one constructed on its site. Unlike the British who actually make a business of haunted houses for tourism purposes (note the Tower of London), many of us won't even watch scary movies.

We lived in a house in Sta. Mesa after the war, where it was claimed one could hear the iron chains that bound the original owner and even see where his blackened feet (from the fires of hell) left their mark on the wide narra boards. Needless to say, I don't remember seeing anything, but it made me a very obedient child indeed when it was bedtime. Come to think of it, I never asked what the poor man was supposed to have done to deserve such a fate that when the family was saying a nine-day novena, his voice was supposedly heard saying that their prayers were useless.

Most houses may lack the drama of ghosts and secret staircases (although there is said to be one in the American ambassador's residence in Baguio that allegedly goes down to a tunnel). I also have not heard of anyone finding money stashed away behind the tabique Pampango (although it's possible that whoever found it may not necessarily broadcast it). But this doesn't mean that such stories are dry and boring.

There was the old Arnedo house in Apalit that I found by following the old McArthur Highway and the Pampanga River. Reading the description of the house in Felix Roxas' articles, I wondered where the Bentwood chairs used during balls had gone and where was the porcelain that their guests had used. Old people said the main house had been gutted by fire and the one where we stood was merely a guest house. The belongings had long been divided among the heirs.

Among the houses on R. Hidalgo Street in Manila was one where a former tenant said you could hear the patter of children's feet on the stairs. He went on to tell how his brother saw a shadow in the azotea raise a cigarette to his mouth.

I was so delighted that I immediately thought a ghost tour of R. Hidalgo would be a huge success. But Butch Zalcita put a damper on my enthusiasm by telling me that Filipinos do not appreciate ghosts. I still haven't figured that one out, especially since other countries even offer tours of cemeteries. Of course, we've got one of the Chinese in La Loma but that's not quite the same thing.

Then there was a bahay na bato in a town in Laguna parts of which were burnt during the Revolution. Many of its furnishings, however, were saved as well as the main living room and massive staircase leading to the second story and the black and white marble tiles of the azotea. Sometime during the early part of the 20th century, it was moved to a suburb by the sea and a new house built around these artifacts. After many years, the old part of the house was again transferred and incorporated into a new house in one of the Makati villages.

Among the items were a small carved table that was said to levitate whenever a daughter of the house came into the room and a music box that played by itself without anyone winding it. Despite my delight at ghost stories, I never saw or heard anything much to my regret, though I was told that a certain psychic saw people going up and down the stairs and sitting on the antique furniture. Eventually the house was sold and I've often wondered whether the new owner ever saw or heard anything unusual.

A history of violence

IT WAS PAST SIX IN THE EVENING AND MY CLASS IN Criminal Procedure had just ended. My group mates and I had decided to do some late-night field work, when a male classmate walked up to us and asked if he could go. "Merong gulo (There's trouble)," he said simply.

Looking over his shoulder, I noticed that there were indeed several male students quietly conferring in groups. Frat men, I concluded. And then I understood that my classmate wanted to avoid getting embroiled in an impending clash between his fraternity and another Greek-letter fraternity.

I am not and never have been a member of any organization which requires recruits to go through initiation rites or which has the habit of going to war with other similarly oriented organizations. I almost do not care if members of fraternities beat up one another out of a misguided sense of brotherhood. I do not want to get into trouble. But the problem is, even non-fraternity members can sometimes be caught up in the crossfire of frat wars. Students like us have often ended up victims of the culture of violence that seems to animate some fraternities.

Who was it who said that "writing saved me from the sin and inconvenience of violence"? I prefer to write rather than make a lonely protest rally around the school campus and secretly put up posters denouncing fraternity violence. I am afraid that I would be facing the fraternities by my lonesome if they got wind of my protest against their violent acts. I must say that I am only against frat men who advocate and practice violence in the name of brotherhood. I am not saying all frat members have his violent streak. My male classmate, for one, tries very hard to avoid trouble and even goes out of his way to make friends with members of other fraternities. But I believe that victims of fraternity-related violence also deserve to be heard.

I can still remember how a few years back, a poor scholar met a violent death at the hands of hired killers after he was mistaken for a member of a rival fraternity. He was just sitting on a bench, near the hangout of one fraternity, without any thought of being hit by some hired goons or frat men since he was not affiliated with any fraternity. He thought wrongly and paid dearly for it.

More recently, a grandson of a highly placed politician died after going through initiation rites mandated by one fraternity. And this year has seen a rise in fraternity-related assaults right on the UP campus and the victims included not only frat men but even some students who had no fraternities. What a waste of some of our nation's youth.

Some officers of fraternities that were involved in violent incidents have been in compliance with the Anti-Hazing Law. But while our legislators seem to have finally recognized the threats being posed by certain frat rituals, I believe the law is still inadequate. The first time I read RA 8049, I already knew it would not be effective in stopping fraternity-related violence or "physically taxing" initiation rites. In fact, the law does not prohibit physical initiation at all. It should not have been labeled as an Anti-Hazing Law since all it does is regulate the process of initiation by requiring fraternities to seek permission from school authorities prior to conducting such rites.

RA 8049 prescribes harsh penalties for participants in initiation rites when a neophyte suffers physical injuries or becomes insane, imbecile, impotent, or blind. The law imposes the penalty of reclusion perpetua when the hazing is marred by the death, rape, sodomy or mutilation of a neophyte. Of course, this is much better than having no law at all. But again it must be pointed out that this does not actually prevent fraternities and other organizations from making their recruits go through excruciatingly painful and emotionally draining initiation rites. The victim can only have recourse to the law after violent acts have been committed to him.

Indeed fortunate are those who get out of these initiation rites alive and become the "brods" of their tormentors. But how about those who do not survive or those who are maimed for life? What will years of imprisonment imposed on the perpetrators do to a dead or disabled recruit? Prison will not restore a recruit's life or limb.

I believe that one of the best solutions to end fraternity-related violence is for the fraternity alumni themselves to openly denounce the violent actions of their brods. Many of these alumni now occupy positions of authority and influence and their sentiments will be heard and respected by their juniors. It is time to undertake reforms within the fraternities themselves.

I have often wondered how these impressive-sounding, Greek-letter organizations became immersed in the culture of violence. It is time for the members of fraternities themselves to ask the same question and return to the practice of brotherhood in the truest sense of the word. The history of violence that has been associated with fraternities should be rewritten starting today.

Not enough reason to sacrifice our environment and fishermen

THE REPORTED TOXIC SPILLS FROM the mining operations of Lafayette Phil. Inc. in Rapu-Rapu, Albay, which is said to have contaminated the immediate waters of Albay Gulf and a portion of Pacific Ocean surrounding Rapu-Rapu, have caused a fish scare among residents of the nearby town of Prieto-Diaz, Sorsogon.

Prieto-Diaz is one of the poorest municipalities of the country. No amount of presidential visit will uplift the marginalized condition of its townfolk. It lies along Albay Gulf on the north, just across Rapu-Rapu Island where Lafayette has its mining operations. Its main source of livelihood is fishing. Most of its people depend on daily fish catch for sustenance. With the fish scare in their minds, I wonder how they are able to cope with this man-made calamity.

My research shows that Lafayette is a publicly listed Australian and German corporation. In short, Lafayette is a foreign-owned corporation. Under our Constitution, the exploitation of minerals within Philippine territory is a privilege limited to Filipinos only. In other words, only Filipinos or Filipino-owned corporations may be allowed to exploit minerals found in the bowels of the earth within our geographical territory. Hence, we cannot help but wonder how this administration allowed Lafayette to extract gold, silver, copper and zinc in Rapu-Rapu, despite the very clear prohibition under our Constitution.

We recognize the need for foreign investments. But this need should not be made a reason for allowing the degradation of our environment and depriving poor fisherfolks of their livelihood.

Why the delayed GSIS checks

ALLOW US TO CLARIFY THE POINTS RAISED by Chona M. Mantilla in her letter regarding what she called the very late delivery of GSIS (Government Service Insurance System) pensioners checks.

First, we admit that there was a slight delay in the delivery of the December pension checks. This was so because the GSIS was—and is—still in the process of validating the "records-cleansing" that we have been doing in the past couple of years. We have to do this in order to rid our database of "ghost" members that have caused severe financial drain on GSIS' pension fund. Although we have finished cleansing our database, including the records of our pensioners and retirees, we still have to double-check our final data to make sure that every peso that the GSIS releases to our beneficiaries really goes to our deserving pensioners and members.

Second, the cash gift to pensioners that Mantilla referred to as a bonus was mailed together with their January pension checks, precisely for the same reason stated above. The delivery of the December pension checks would have been further delayed had we chosen to send it with the cash gift. From hereon, with the completion of the database-cleansing, we are confident that there will be no more such delays in the future.

Mantilla likewise complained about the "discourteous behavior" of some GSIS staff in dealing with our members. We sincerely request her to please provide us the names of any GSIS employee or member discourteous with her, so that we can properly respond to her concern.

For those who do not know yet, more than a year ago, GSIS general manager Winston Garcia launched a no-nonsense campaign to make sure that all our employees will render efficient and courteous service all the time. The GSIS will never tolerate any act of discourtesy by its employees. However, we need our members and the public to help us in this campaign by providing us names and specific incidents, so we can initiate the needed investigations and punish the guilty.

Not in millions

THIS HAS REFERENCE TO THE NEWS STORY titled "For 14th year, Joker is Congress 'Kuripot King,'" written by Juliet L. Javellana. (PDI, 1/03/05) The story bared the amount of taxpayer money that the senators used for their foreign travels. To quote a portion of Javellana's report: "The footloose among the incumbent senators, as indicated by their foreign travel expenses, were Senators Biazon, chair of the defense committee; Miriam Defensor-Santiago, chair of the foreign relations committee, and Ramon 'Bong' Revilla Jr., who spent P382.4 million, P388.3 million and P76 million, respectively."

We would like to respectfully correct that part of the story. Based on the records of our office and that of the Senate budget office as confirmed by its director, Senator Santiago's actual international travel expenses amounted to just P388,342. It did not reach even a million.

Give teachers their due

IT SADDENS US THAT A LOT OF OUR teachers are leaving the Philippines to work abroad. As noted in a news report, titled "Teach here first, DepEd urges migrating teachers," the Department of Education cannot prevent them from leaving. (PDI, 11/21/05) They are leaving because their present salaries are not enough to meet the needs of their families—what with the ever-rising cost of living in our country. The teachers should not be blamed for leaving the country if our government cannot provide them with better salaries and benefits.

Reading the article made us feel both sad and happy. Sad because the teachers have to leave their loved ones and put monetary value to their calling. Besides, they are turning their back on their mission to educate their fellow Filipinos.

But we also feel happy that they will earn four to five times more than they do here, and so make life better for the families they will leave behind.

We are also proud of them because foreign countries regard teaching as a very noble profession. Remember how it was several decades ago when teachers here were highly regarded by our society?

Let us forget, the government is to blame for this brain drain. The Constitution states that the government should "give priority to education which fosters patriotism and nationalism, accelerates social progress, and promotes total human liberation and development." It emphasizes that education be given budget priority.

Teachers teach nationalism and patriotism so they are expected to "walk the talk." But at the same time, it is the responsibility of the government and private schools to give them just compensation, provide them with the needed instructional aid facilities, build enough classrooms, improve the teacher-student ratio, open up more opportunities for the teachers' professional growth, and institute other reforms for the benefit of both students and educators.

Some of us in our class desire to teach abroad but only so we will learn and acquire the latest methodology, technology and teaching strategies now in use in developed countries. Then we will return to the Philippines and impart with vigor all that we shall have learned abroad. We also want all teachers to be given the respect and honor they truly deserve as "shapers" of the hearts and minds of Filipinos.

This passage, taken from an article titled "Not only for dogs, 2006 is also Year of the Turtle," (PDI, 1/03/05) is erroneous.

It is the horny, brown and yellow layer on the outer surface of the sea turtle's shell or carapace, called tortoiseshell, that is used for making eyeglass frames, combs and ornamental articles.

'Ang Pangulo' burns; 4 injured

CAMP VICENTE LIM, LAGUNA—A 10-MINUTE FIRE gutted the presidential yacht BRP Ang Pangulo while it was undergoing repair at a pier in Bauan, Batangas on Saturday, the INQUIRER learned yesterday.

A report reaching this camp said the fire started at around 6:30 a.m. It was put out about 10 minutes later by responding firemen.

The vessel was undergoing repair at the Keppel Dry Dock in Barangay San Miguel when the fire broke out, the report said.

It said investigators have yet to determine the cause of the fire.

But a source told the INQUIRER that a short circuit in the main engine of the vessel started the fire.

The source added that the Presidential Security Group barred arson investigators from entering the yacht.

For still unknown reasons, the PSG personnel deployed in the area instructed even the local police not to divulge the incident to the media, the source said.

"The PSG said the directive came from Malacañang," the source told the INQUIRER.

Four Navy personnel were slightly injured as they helped put out the fire. The Navy said the yacht suffered "minor damages."

In a statement, the Philippine Navy said Vice Admiral Mateo Mayuga, Navy chief, has ordered an investigation.

The fire damaged the boat's air-conditioning unit, water pipes, electrical wiring, dust catcher room, skylight openings and sight glass for reserve tanks and pressure gauges.

The VIP and other rooms were spared from the fire.

The Navy said the boat could have been destroyed had not its watches acted immediately.

The watches, who were on routine inspection, noticed smoke near the access door to the main and auxiliary engine rooms, according to the initial report submitted by the Ang Pangulo commanding officer, Commander Gaudencio Collado Jr.

The watches failed to control the fire with extinguishers. They were joined by the crew and shipyard personnel in putting out the fire.

Firefighters from the Bauan Bureau of Fire Protection and the crew of other boats in the shipyard also helped put out the fire completely.

The Ang Pangulo (or AT 25) has been undergoing repairs at the Keppel Batangas Shipyard in Bauan, Batangas since November.

The repairs are expected to be finished in February.

The Philippine government bought the yacht for $3 million in 1959. It can accommodate up to 400 people.

The yacht became controversial when, in August 1998, then President Joseph Estrada announced that private donors pooled P100 million to give it a facelift.

In January 2001, President Macapagal-Arroyo said she would sell all presidential luxury assets, including the Ang Pangulo, to generate revenue, but the boat remained in government hands.

The government tried to sell it for $5.5 million, but there were no takers.

BANGUED, ABRA—Three pieces of evidence believed used by one of the assassins of La Paz Mayor Marc Ysrael Bernos were recovered from a restaurant owned by his relative and political rival, police said.

Police recovered an M-16 rifle, a bonnet and a jacket on Saturday from Nanay's Kusina in Poblacion La Paz. The eatery is owned by Carmencita Bernos, the late wife of the assassinated mayor's uncle and political opponent, Domingo Bernos, according to Senior Supt. Marvin Bolabola, Criminal Intelligence Detection Group regional director.

When reached by the INQUIRER, Domingo Bernos admitted to owning the property but said he had given it to his daughter who was his wife's namesake.

He said he heard that evidence had been recovered from the property but that he had no idea how the items got there.

"Go ahead, let them investigate. I'm open to that," he said as he challenged authorities to look for all angles and not just politics.

"I have never done anything violent. My town-mates know me. I will be the first person to want to know what really happened," he added.

Marc Ysrael Bernos, who, at 31, was the youngest mayor and most vocal opposition official in the province, was shot in the nape as he was watching a basketball game at the La Paz town plaza on Friday night.

His relatives believed his death was related to politics. "Our initial assessment is that the killing was purely politically motivated..." said former Gov. Andres Bernos, the mayor's father.

The elder Bernos said the murder could be a conspiracy between two people "who had an ax to grind with my son."

Chief Supt. Leonardo Dionisio, Cordillera police director, said the evidence was found through the help of an anonymous texter.

Gov asks execs not to relate politics to mining

SORSOGON CITY—SORSOGON GOV. Raul R. Lee assailed efforts by some local politicians in the province to pin down Lafayette Philippines Inc. as responsible for the mercury contamination of the seawaters of Sorsogon on the Pacific side without concrete proof to that effect.

Lee, in a letter to Lafayette managing director Andrew McIlwain, said the acts of these politicians were not helping the public, especially the fishermen and instead, caused confusion among constituents.

The governor said the company "should not be dragged into the political ongoing atmosphere here in Sorsogon" and assured Lafayette officials

"there is no cause for alarm (for Lafayette) to be always cited by other sources as these are purely political and of no benefit to our fisherfolk and constituency."

He, however, warned the Australian firm of the consequences should it be found that Lafayette indeed caused the mercury contamination, saying the provincial government would not hesitate to take legal actions against the company.

The provincial government had already commissioned the National Science Research Institute (NSRI) to conduct an independent water sample analysis to determine the source of mercury and other chemicals that had contaminated the sea waters.

Lee said the study would focus on mercury and other chemicals because Lafayette had already admitted to two cyanide spills last year, resulting in the imposition by the Department of Environment and Natural Resources of a P10.7-million fine.

The governor said officials and nongovernment organizations should wait for the results of the study before blaming anyone.

Meanwhile, Sorsogon City Mayor Sally Lee said they are now trying to look for P500,000 in funds to finance the NSRI study. Bobby Q. Labalan, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Search for 4 missing in fluvial parade tragedy stopped

By Jani Arnaiz and Connie E. Fernandez
PDI Visayas Bureau

SAN RICARDO, PANAON ISLAND—Less than 24 hours since the sea accident happened, rescuers yesterday stopped the search for four persons who were reported missing after their pumpboat overturned during a fluvial procession on Sunday.

SPO4 Benjamin Alterado, town police chief, said the search and rescue team called off their operations at about 9:30 a.m. when they failed to find any of the missing after searching the area where the accident happened past 10 a.m. on Sunday.

He said the team, composed of two Air Force helicopters, Southern Leyte React Team and 15 pumpboats, went as far as Camiguin province to look for Benjamin Vestal, 34 and daughter Rhea Patria, 4; Jeros Galabo, 7 and Jenny Abuelo, 9.

Alterado said the search started after ML Jun Jay capsized about 200 meters from the wharf of Barangay Inulunan at about 10 a.m. on Sunday.

The operations stopped at midnight and resumed about 4 a.m. yesterday. But five hours later, the team gave up and presumed that the four were already dead, said Alterado.

San Ricardo Mayor Virginia Mejia confirmed that the team called off the search after they could not find anyone due to the strong current.

Local officials were asked to report any sighting of the bodies of the four.

"I believe they are dead. Only God really knows if they would be found," said Mejia.

But Sofia Vestal, 33, appealed to authorities to continue the search.

Benjamin and Rhea were among the 184 passengers of a motor launch that led about 15 vessels in Sunday's fluvial procession in honor of the feast of the Sto. Niño.

But the pumpboat capsized about 200 meters from the wharf at Barangay Inulunan while it was making a turn to return to the port.

Sixteen persons, 14 of them children, were killed while 160 others survived. Four passengers were still at the district hospital in Pintuyan town, Southern Leyte, a 15-minute boat ride from San Ricardo.

According to Alterado, skipper Efrén Sandiesha told police that his passengers did not listen to him when he told them to occupy both sides of the vessel after he noticed that most of them stayed at the right side of the pumpboat.

When the pumpboat made a turn to the left, the police chief said, some passengers transferred to the left side, causing it to tilt and then overturn.

Alterado said it was easy for the boat to tilt because there was nothing to pull it down, as the cargo area located at the lower portion of the pumpboat was empty.

There was also no representative from the organizer of the fluvial parade to marshal the passengers, he added.

Sandiesha did not also coordinate with the Coast Guard before sailing, said Alterado. The Coast Guard station is in Barangay Ebenit, about 2 km from Inulunan. With a report from Jhunnex Napallacan, PDI Visayas Bureau

Statistics at the provincial police showed that 26 robberies and shootings last year were also perpetrated by motorcycle-riding suspects, most of them wearing helmets. Supt. 5,000 ECCs raise eyebrows

LUCENA CITY—A militant group assailed Environment Secretary Michael Defensor for approving 4,986 Environmental Clearance Certificates last year and compared the fast distribution of the vital document to free fast food coupons for foreign investors. "The ECCs were awarded to foreign investors like free fast food coupons. They can easily get the ECCs at the counter with no sweat and in red carpet fashion," Gerry Albert Corpuz, information officer of the fisherfolk alliance Pambansang Lakas ng Kilusang Mama-malakaya ng Pilipinas (Pamalalakaya), said in a statement.

Vice mayor's son held

CAMP VICENTE LIM, Laguna—A son of the vice mayor of Amadeo, Cavite, who was earlier reported to have been abducted by unidentified men, was actually arrested by agents of the National Anti-Kidnapping Task Force (NAKTF) on Tuesday, police said. Chief Supt. Jesus Verzosa, Calabarzon police director, said Marlon Bawalan, 39, son of Amadeo Vice Mayor Elpidio Bawalan, was arrested in Barangay Maitim, Amadeo at about 6:30 a.m. Tuesday. He said Marlon was not abducted but was arrested in connection with a hijacking case in Cavite last December. "It was not a kidnapping.... It was a legitimate police operation," Verzosa told the INQUIRER.

Solons to refile wage bill

LUCENA CITY—Anakpawis Representatives Crispin Beltran and Rafael Mariano vowed to refile House Bill No. 345 calling for a legislated P125 across-the-board nationwide wage hike when Congress resumes session. "The struggle for the long-delayed P125 across-the-board nationwide wage hike will be entering its sixth year," Beltran, former chair of the militant Kilusang Mayo Uno, said in a statement. He said it's been six years since wages were increased.

Lozano files impeach rap ahead of opposition again

dent Macapagal-Arroyo that the House of Representatives thrashed in September last year.

At 11:16 a.m., the former lawyer of the late dictator Ferdinand Marcos filed the complaint with House Secretary General Roberto Nazareno, who forthwith stamped it "Received."

Doubting the legality of Lozano's action, Nazareno did not allow the lawyer to swear that the complaint was authentic.

The Constitution bars a second impeachment complaint against the same impeachable official, in this case Ms Arroyo, within one year.

House Minority Leader Francis Escudero promptly declared Lozano's move "illegal" because he used the opposition's amended complaint against Ms Arroyo without the "permission" of its original endorsers.

Lozano filed the first complaint on June 27 last year but later allowed the minority to amend it.

The amended complaint charged Ms Arroyo with culpable violation of the Constitution, betrayal of public trust, and bribery and graft and corruption.

The specific allegations included committing electoral fraud in 2004, receiving huge kickbacks from gambling lords, and approving contracts that were manifestly disadvantageous to the government.

In just over a month of deliberations, the House quashed the impeachment complaint, ruling that the amended charge was "new and separate" from the Lozano complaint, thus barring its filing.

The Lozano complaint itself suffered the same fate because, although it was declared sufficient in form, it was declared insufficient in substance.

A finding of sufficiency in form and substance is a prerequisite to allowing an impeachment complaint to be transmitted to the Senate for trial.

Rat race

At a press conference, Escudero said the minority's legal team was studying whether to file administrative and criminal charges against Lozano.

"We're saddened by his action. We don't know why he did it; it's as if he again wants this to be a rat race to be participated in by the opposition," Escudero said.

Nazareno told reporters that he was merely performing a "ministerial" duty.

"I have to inquire from the rules (of the House) if the endorsements were OK. The re-filing of the complaint was OK but you have to have a new resolution of endorsement," said Nazareno.

News clippings

He noted that Lozano merely attached the list of signatures of original endorsers to the amended complaint filed by the opposition last July 25.

Nazareno observed that except for the complaint, "all resolutions of endorsement were duplicate (copies)."

The complaint also bore some attachments, including clippings of news items about the current political crisis and transcripts of the three-hour "Hello Garci" audio tapes, which purportedly showed that Ms Arroyo stole the 2004 presidential election.

Justifying the haste with which he refiled the impeachment complaint, Lozano said he tried to meet with the members of the House minority who were having a meeting at the Sulo Hotel in Quezon City yesterday morning.

Locked out

"But they locked me out of the meeting. They did not even give me the courtesy of informing me whether I was invited or not. They made me wait. I feel insulted," he told reporters.

"But in fighting for my principles, I should never involve my personal emotions, so I contained my pride, held my anger and gracefully exited," he said.

Lozano said Escudero did see him at about 9 a.m. He said he was able to explain to the lawmaker why he was filing the case ahead of the opposition.

"I'm not going to violate the one-year ban. As interpreted by the Supreme Court, the prohibition is on multiple initiation of impeachment proceedings, not on the filing," Lozano told Escudero.

Lozano said the young leader of the opposition in the House, who had waged a failed bid to impeach Ms Arroyo, was "silent."

"He did not give me the go-signal, but he also did not prevent me (from doing so)," said Lozano.

Violations of law

Escudero acknowledged seeing Lozano at Sulo Hotel.

"I told him to wait after the meeting, so that I and Congressman Zamora could talk with him. He did not wait for us. In fact, he called his own press conference and went to Congress to file it. I texted him last Thursday inviting him for a meeting Friday, which he eventually rejected," the minority leader said.

Escudero wanted to meet with Lozano "to get his side, listen to him about his plans—why, when and how?"

He reminded Lozano that the resolutions of endorsements were valid only last year. "Using the endorsements without their permission is not only a clear violation of the law but also of the ethical standards observed by lawyers," Escudero said.

Ban lifted in July

The lawmaker insisted that based on impeachment rules, "nothing can be initiated within LAWYER Oliver Lozano refiles his amended impeachment complaint against President Arroyo in the House of Representatives.

one year," and that the "definition of initiation is filing and referral."

Escudero said the constitutional ban would be lifted in July.

As to the right of Lozano to file the complaint, the minority leader said it was "the right of anyone to file a complaint ... if that is a private complaint."

Quoting Lozano, the lawmaker said Lozano was doing it "para sa bayan (for the country)," although he himself was unsure what he meant.

Just the same, Escudero reiterated his call for the Arroyo administration not to "bastardize the process."

"They should wait for the true, genuine and real minority to (initiate the process) and not muddle it the way they shamelessly did last year," he said.

Escudero acknowledged that the ambiguity of the impeachment rules was the "pitfall of the system."

"That's why the minority will seek to amend the rules," he said.

Top Republican says Bush may face impeachment hearings into the growing controversy early next month.

But in his appearance on ABC's "This Week" program, Specter insisted the Senate was not going to give the President what he called "a blank check."

When asked what could happen if lawmakers found Bush in violation of the law, Specter answered: "Impeachment is a remedy. After impeachment, you could have a criminal prosecution, but the principal remedy ... under our society is to pay a political price."

He made it a point to clarify, however, that he was speaking theoretically and was "not suggesting remotely that there's any basis" for a presidential impeachment at this moment.

The controversy erupted last month after The New York Times reported that Bush had repeatedly authorized the National Security Agency to monitor overseas telephone calls and e-mail traffic to and from people living in the United States without requisite permission from a court.

Under the 1978 Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, the government can conduct such surveillance only for 72 hours as it seeks a warrant for continued monitoring.

Bush has blasted the disclosure as harmful to national security and vowed to continue the wiretaps, arguing he had the right to authorize them under his constitutional war powers as well as a resolution passed by Congress in the wake of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

The measure adopted three days after the strikes allows the president "to use all necessary and appropriate force" against those involved in them, but contains no specific language on surveillance.

Specter said he disagreed with the contention that the resolution included an implicit authorization to modify the surveillance act.

"If that's what the administration was relying on, I thought they were wrong," he pointed out.

A knotty question

Specter added that the issue of wartime presidential powers was "a very knotty question" that "ought to be thoroughly examined."

Specter assured he was prepared to listen to the administration's explanations, but warned, "I'm going to wear my skepticism on my sleeve."

Specter became the second Republican member of the judiciary committee to publicly question the president's rationale for authorizing the wiretaps.

Sen. Sam Brownback said last month he did not agree "with the legal basis on which they are basing their surveillance."

The statements indicate the Bush administration will not be able to count on full support from the 10 Republicans in the committee when the hearings begin in early February.

The judiciary committee also has eight Democrats, who have questioned the legality of the surveillance program.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, one of the Democratic members, reiterated her doubts on Sunday, saying, "I do not believe it's true that the President's plenary power would allow him to simply avoid the law."

The fray was also joined by First Lady Laura Bush, who told reporters on the way to Liberia that the American people expected the President "to do what they can to make sure there's not an attack by foreign terrorists."

The latest CNN/USA Today/Gallup Poll found that 50 percent of Americans believe the administration was right in undertaking those wiretaps, while 46 percent said it was wrong.

Bamboo band music lives on, even in PNP

of notes. You have to wait for certain portions of a musical score before you can play. It is a bit more complicated, yet the melody is mellow and sweet to the ears."

Ramos wants to teach the police how to play instruments that Filipinos can truly call their own. To date, the PNP Band can beautifully execute Filipino songs.

In fact, the Ramos clan has been doing just that for generations.

Land of bamboos

Ramos is from Malabon town, a fusion of the words "ma" and "labong," which means a land full of bamboo shoots. It is little wonder that Malabon residents have fashioned musical instruments out of bamboo stalks and created a bandang kawayan (bamboo band).

Ramos' great grandfather, Felix, along with five others, was a pioneer of such a band.

From a folder, Ramos draws out a photo of the band. In it are eight men from a century ago when Filipinos were just beginning to create a nation.

Did Felix know his craft would survive his death, and pass from one generation to the next? Did the men know their sons and daughters would live in a free, democratic country?

Days of the Katipuneros

At the backdrop is a flag showing a sun with several rays.

"It's a Katipunan flag. They are Katipuneros, too," Ramos says, referring to the organization formed by revolutionary hero Andres Bonifacio to free the Philippines from Spanish colonial rule.

Felix's sons would inherit their father's love for the bamboo instruments, and so would the third and fourth generations of Ramoses.

"Among my father's siblings, it was my uncle Mario who really took to playing bamboo instruments," Ramos says. During his time, Mario was in charge of the band, managing members and taking care of the instruments.

Music till eternity

When a member of the band dies, his instrument is placed inside the coffin, for him to carry to eternity.

"My siblings can create bamboo instruments better than I can," Ramos says.

Ramos started playing bamboo instruments when he was 6, joining a bamboo band, a tradition that his nieces

POI Editha Salenga and POI Alex Estallo play the "angklung," a native musical instrument made of bamboo, during the annual general inspection at the Camp Crame grandstand area. They are part of the 18-member PNP Bamboo Band. LYN RILLON and nephews keep alive.

Besides the joy that playing music gives him, music also gave Ramos a shot at a college education. It was perhaps one of the legacies that his forebears had not foreseen.

Early days

He was a scholar at the university, becoming the UST Band's assistant conductor before his graduation in 1986. Some of Ramos' nieces and nephews are also scholars.

One of his teachers at UST was Col. Pedro Tolentino, the PNP Band's seventh conductor since its creation in 1902.

It was Tolentino who lured Ramos into the PNP.

After graduation, Ramos found himself a young officer in the Philippine Constabulary. In 1995, after stints in the bands of the Philippine Military Academy and another police training center, Ramos became the conductor of the PNP Band.

Gun in one hand

Does he not find contradiction in playing a musical instrument, one that gives joy to the soul, and in wielding a gun, one that ends life?

"Not at all," Ramos says. "We all know our role in the police, and that is to provide music. Can you imagine a PNP anniversary or a police parade or a wake without a band? I can't."

A high note in Ramos' career occurred in Singapore in 1997 when police bands in the region performed during a meeting of Southeast Asian police chiefs.

A cop's dream

"We did not know they were going to pick up the best police band. We just played, and they picked us," Ramos narrates. "During the closing ceremony, I was called to conduct all the other bands. It felt great."

For many, a successful man is one who has reached the top of his organization, whatever it is. Ramos has certainly done that.

Yet in a sense, his work is still not quite complete. Ramos says he wants to do one more thing before bowing out of the police organization—and that is to teach the band's members, now experts at playing brass instruments, to become also experts at playing bamboo instruments.

To date, half of the band's 39 members can already play bamboo instruments.

Once, they played before a group that included generals.

"They were so amazed, and couldn't quite get over it. You know musicians, the best compliment we get is a clap and a cheer," Ramos says.

He dreams of the day when all elementary schools will have bands that play not only lyres and drums but also bamboo instruments.

That, he says, will be the day.

RP future bleak . . .

he told a group of reporters, businessmen and members of the diplomatic corps in Makati City yesterday.

Bear Stearns is the same investment bank that cheered on President Macapagal-Arroyo's drive to reform the fiscal sector last year, mainly through the enactment of an expanded value-added tax law.

Stuerner acknowledged that he was responsible for making the controversial prediction in July 2005 that Ms Arroyo would survive the impeachment complaint filed against her in Congress—at least until January 2006.

"It's now January 2006," he said.

Tougher politically

Stuerner is giving the President a 50- to 60-percent chance of remaining in office under the present system of government.

"GMA is tougher politically than the opposition expected," he said. "The longer impeachment and Cha-cha go on, the more GMA's political support will recover."

Stuerner also said there was a 25- to 30-percent chance that the country would shift to a parliamentary form of government. He noted that there was little public support for the move which, he said, was "mainly a creation of Manila's elite."

Finally, the Bear Stearns analyst said there was only a 15- to 20-percent chance that Ms Arroyo would be impeached by the House of Representatives and convicted by the Senate.

"GMA's allies control the lower house and will undermine the impeachment process with procedural obstructionism," he said.

The impeachment complaint against Ms Arroyo was thrashed by the House in September last year, but the opposition has vowed to file another impeachment case against her this year.

Stuerner's bearish economic assessment came even as he acknowledged the peso was one of the best-performing currencies in the region.

He also took note of the resurgent stock market, the respectable pace of economic growth and the "marginal" slowdown in the acceleration of consumer prices.

"The short term view is positive," he said. "Everything is coming up roses."

No impact on the poor

But he said he was "not that optimistic" in general terms. "Yes, we'll have a 5- to 6-percent [economic] growth each year. Everything is improving, but it has no impact on the standard of living for Filipinos."

Stuerner's candid assessment echoes the earlier sentiment aired by Sen. Manuel "Mar" Roxas II, who pointed out that the benefits of a strengthening peso against the US dollar—a key bragging point for Ms Arroyo and her publicists—had failed to filter down to the majority of impoverished Filipinos.

Stuerner described the local economy as "very resilient," noting that the last time the gross domestic product contracted was in the wake of the East Asian financial crisis in 1997.

Even then, he said the contraction was due to El Niño, which cut agricultural output. "It is very hard to make the Philippine economy collapse on any given year."

Undoing

The Bear Stearns analyst believed, however, that this resilience would be the country's undoing.

"The downside is this: There is now a downside for bad political behavior," he said. "The Philippines' political class has no incentive for good political behavior."

Because the bulk of economic growth still depends on agricultural output, which is largely immune from politics, political squabbles can only depress growth by so much.

Benjamin Diokno, a professor at the University of the Philippines School of Economics, underscored this point in a presentation.

He showed that the local economy had historically grown by an average of 4 percent, despite various boom and bust cycles, mainly because of built-in safeguards like the country's dependence on agriculture.

Little incentive for reforms

This scheme means there is "little incentive for meaningful structural reform that will attract real investments," Diokno said.

He said the last round of genuine structural reforms in the Philippines came in 1986 with the toppling of the Marcos dictatorship.

"Now, the only 'out' is to send your mother abroad to work as a maid," he said. "This is having negative social implications."

Diokno, who served as budget secretary in the Estrada administration, predicted that the local economy would grow by only 4.6 percent this year—significantly lower than the government's official growth target of 6.3 percent to 7.4 percent.

He said the economy continued to be threatened by the possibility of high interest rates, a potential surge in international crude oil prices to $70 per barrel, a decline in income from electronics exports, and political instability.

Russian diplomat found dead in Makati condo

By Tarra V. Quismundo

A JUNIOR RUSSIAN DIPLOMAT WAS FOUND dead and floating in a swimming pool at a condominium in Makati City on Sunday night. The police said the case was the first reported death of a foreigner in the city this year.

The Russian was identified as Gurgun Albertovich Balayan, 22, a protocol officer and a resident of the Makati Tuscany Condominium at the corner of Ponda Street and Ayala Avenue.

His body was found by another foreigner who lived in the same building.

An investigation conducted by the Makati

Police Department's Homicide Section showed that Balayan's body was first discovered by a Korean, Moon Hag Kim.

Just 'relaxing'

Moon told the police that he saw Balayan at a few minutes past 7 p.m. as he passed by the swimming pool. He said the Russian was floating face down but added that he did not think much of it as he thought Balayan was just relaxing.

Moon, however, said he decided to call the building's security officers when he returned and saw the Russian still in the same position at around 7:30 p.m.

The swimming pool was about four to five feet deep, security guard Rene Villanueva told the police.

Dead on arrival

SPO1 Lewelie Cristobal, case investigator, said in his report that the security officers tried to revive Balayan but decided to rush him to the Makati Medical Center when their efforts proved futile.

Balayan was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital. Officials from the Russian Embassy were present but declined to comment. Balayan was brought to the Veronica Funeral Parlor in Pasay City for autopsy.

Police said they were investigating whether his death was accidental or due to foul play.

Pasay animators to debut on HK TV

By Jocelyn R. Uy

PASAY CITY'S ANIMATORS are going international.

Eleven residents who recently completed a rigid three-month training program on professional animation are now busy working on their first project—"Jobert," a cartoon series which will debut on Hong Kong television by the middle of the year, Pasay City Cooperative Office Head Rolando Londonio told the INQUIRER yesterday.

The 11 were the first batch of graduates from the animation training program initiated by the city government last year to turn aspiring artists into world-class animators.

Of the 20 Pasay residents who qualified for entry into the program, only 11 hurdled the rigid training conducted by Top Peg Animation and Creative Studio, an independent local animation firm, Londonio said.

Top Peg immediately hired the 11 animators to contribute to the cartoon series that would soon air in Hong Kong, he added.

"Their names will be included in the credits," said Grace Dimaranan, Top Peg managing editor.

"The cartoon series will be like 'Tutubi Patrol,' but will be most likely relevant to Overseas Filipino Workers," Londonio said.

Top Peg's "Tutubi Patrol" was an animation series for children that dealt with Filipino values.

Mayor Wenceslao "Peewee" Trinidad, meanwhile, said the city's dream of producing world-class animators was becoming a reality.

A second batch of animators has already begun training under Top Peg which will teach them the Western and Japanese styles of animation.

Suspect in twin slay to remain in Crame

By DJ Yap

THE POLICE CAPTAIN WHO ALLEGEDLY SHOT dead basketball referee Froilan Jimeno and his brother, Arnold, on Christmas Day will not be moving to the Quezon City Jail anytime soon.

Senior Insp. Michael Sanchez was allowed yesterday to stay at the Camp Crame custodial center, after he told a Quezon City court that his life might be in danger due to 21 Tadtad Gang members detained at the jail, whom he helped neutralize.

His arraignment also did not push through after the court granted his motion for a preliminary investigation to determine whether the charge against him ought to be murder or homicide.

At yesterday's hearing before Judge Hilario Laqui of the Quezon City Regional Trial Court Branch 218, Sanchez submitted a motion seeking his continued stay at Camp Crame, instead of being transferred to the city jail as was customary for murder suspects.

The policeman, a member of the city police's mobile patrol unit, said his life might be at risk because of the Tadtad Gang members detained at the city jail.

He explained that 12 days before the Christmas Day incident, he was part of the police team that caught several alleged Tadtad Gang members engaged in land-grabbing.

The Jimenos' lawyer, Romeo Erenio, said he opposed the motion on the ground that there was no sufficient basis for the alleged threat to Sanchez's life.

He added that the motion was, in effect, an insult to the capability of the Bureau of Jail Management and Penology to secure its inmates. Laqui, however, granted the motion.

The judge also granted Sanchez's motion for a preliminary investigation, after the policeman questioned the city prosecutor's amendment of the charges from homicide to murder. Sanchez said the affidavit of an eyewitness was disputable, since it was given after the inquest proceedings.

But Erenio said this was only proper, since, under the rules, affidavits could still be included as long as the inquest sheet had not yet been signed.

Sanchez is the primary suspect in the killing of the Jimeno brothers on Dec. 25 over a minor traffic altercation in Novaliches.

The Jimenos were riding on scooters along General Luis corner Damong Maliit Streets when they collided with a Toyota Revo at 10:55 a.m., where Sanchez and his relatives were on board.

After a heated argument over who was at fault, Sanchez allegedly took out his M-16 rifle and shot the brothers repeatedly.

Another brother, Ferdinand, died of a heart attack on the same day upon learning that Froilan and Arnold had died.

Meanwhile, the Jimeno family apologized to PO3 Florencio Escobido of the Quezon City Police District criminal investigation division for falsely charging that he was sympathetic to Sanchez and rude to the victims' family.

They said there was just miscommunication among the Jimenos when one of them told an INQUIRER columnist that Escobido had demanded that they buy him food, among other demands.

It was even the policeman who bought food for the family, the Jimenos said.

MMDA fights back

METROPOLITAN Manila Development Authority (MMDA) Traffic Operations Center Executive Director Angelito Vergel de Dios said yesterday they were readying charges of illegal arrest against Makati police intelligence officers who apprehended MMDA traffic enforcer Eddie Cruz, 42. Cruz was the first to be arrested after Makati Mayor Jejomar Binay ordered local authorities to detain any MMDA traffic enforcer caught apprehending motorists in his area. Cruz had flagged down a motorist at the corner of Ayala Avenue and Edsa for beating a red light last Sunday.

Vizconde Massacre revisited

FORMER MANILA CITY PROSECUTOR JOSE B. Flaminiano has cited some vital testimony during the Vizconde Massacre trial that the trial judge, Amelita Tolentino, ignored.

Tolentino, now a Court of Appeals justice, convicted all the accused in the crime billed by the media as the "trial of the century."

Flaminiano is asking the Court of Appeals which affirmed Tolentino's verdict to reconsider its decision. Flaminiano is counsel for Hospicio "Pyke" Fernandez.

The most prominent accused in the Vizconde Massacre is Hubert Webb, son of former Sen. Freddie Webb.

"Joe Flame," as he is known in the legal circle, seeks to burn the testimony of principal prosecution witness Jessica Alfaro in a 14-page motion for reconsideration.

Flaminiano cited the testimony of Artemio Sacaguig, then head of the National Bureau of Investigation's Anti-kidnapping, Hijacking and Armed Robbery Task Force.

Alfaro was Sacaguig's asset or informer.

Sacaguig testified in Tolentino's court that Alfaro told him she knew "somebody" who related to her the details of the massacre of the members of the Vizconde family.

Showing interest in Alfaro's revelation, Sacaguig asked her to produce the supposed "witness."

Unable to produce the witness because, she said, the man "does not like to testify," Alfaro, according to Sacaguig's testimony, said: "Easy lang, Sir. Sir, relax lang, sir, papapelan ko, papapelan ko na lang yan (I'll play the role of the witness)."

Sacaguig then told Alfaro: "Hindi puwede 'yan, kasi hindi ka naman eyewitness (Your testimony won't be accepted because you were not an eyewitness)."

Sacaguig said Alfaro became silent and left his office after she was rebuffed.

Flaminiano also cited a sworn statement of a certain Roberto Barroso, a member of a burglary gang who confessed to having barged into the Vizconde house.

(Barroso and his gangmates were charged with robbery with homicide and rape before the Makati Regional Trial Court for the Vizconde Massacre. They were acquitted by the court which said that their confessions were illegally taken by the police).

Barroso said they entered the Vizconde house through the garage, and broke the glass door.

Anyway, whoever wrote me that letter threatening my life for "defending the rapists and killers," should queue up because he's not the only one who wants to do that.

I've received a lot of hate mails and calls for taking up the cudgels for Hubert Webb et al.

Anyway, I would hate to disappoint him should he make good his threat. Subukan lang niya.

Even after this column exposed the smuggling activities of siblings Vicky and Tomas Toh last Saturday, they have not been affected.

Yesterday, my sources at the Bureau of Customs said the Tohs smuggled out of the customs zone 30 container vans filled with resins, a highly taxable item.

They paid only the P240 processing fee for each container van.

Lost lullaby in LA

BARE EYE

Recah Trinidad

LOS ANGELES—The thick air inside the Wild Card gym seemed to groan as Manny Pacquiao ripped through it with sharp, flashing punches, again and again, his eyes sparkling wild like those of a cornered tiger.

"That's power from GenSan, tuna capital of the Philippines," blurted the bearded Pacquiao from middle ring, before moving to the corner for a sip of water.

He smiled a naughty, knowing smile then resumed punishing the air.

No need anymore to announce how strong and good Pacquiao had felt.

Aglow in sweat, the rock-hard abdominal muscles would say it all.

Pacquiao could indeed be in the fiercest, finest form of his fighting career.

But, then, is this actually the finest season to be here? It's thick-jacket weather here, and don't forget the hood, please.

The bag ladies, grimy winos, beatniks and assorted vagrants shrink and recoil in the gray chill along Vine St. in Hollywood.

A swig of cheap gin, a borrowed cigarette, or any warm, old thing would help. Even homeless, loveless souls have to log some sleep.

At the corner of La Mirada, they have slashed and pulled down the sentimental black-and-white James Dean mural outside the car shop from where the legendary movieland rebel bought and drove his red Porsche to death on the highway in 1955.

The column of the great Jim Murray, may he rest in peace, has ceased appearing in the Los Angeles Times.

Arriving at the Tom Bradley Airport, the visitor, cold, is re-assured by the warm scent of brewing coffee and cinnamon rolls toasting in the oven.

But, looking closer again, the visitor groped for the LA he had always returned to and learned to adore.

Sorry now, but an unredeemable treasure—a childhood lullaby, a mother's warm, loving smile—has been lost forever in the wintry cold.

OK, Pacquiao may indeed be one of the finest things ever to return to LA.

But is this the right time and the right place for him to be here?

The price, the fight purse to be exact, may be right. He's being paid $2 million to fight Mexican Erik Morales again.

But on Friday night, at the veranda of his second-floor flat off Hollywood's Sunset Boulevard, Pacquiao was musing on how to please his countless friends and admirers.

First, he has already set aside $40,000 for tickets to be distributed to those who had placed early requests.

Add to that the list of those whom he had to provide plane tickets for, from Manila to here and back. The request lists continue to grow, day after day, as The Battle nears.

Pacquiao swore he wanted to put all these problems and other assorted hassles behind him, if just for the moment.

Problems, problems.

But nothing compares to the impending tempest which he encounters in Las Vegas, some six hours by car from here, next Saturday (Sunday morning in Manila).

Pacquiao has indeed trained hardest for this battle of battles.

But how does he offset the built-in technical superiority of Morales, who had tamed and conquered him the way a matador would a raging bull, in their first clash last March?

He should have enough rest, advises martial arts master Shakespeare Chan.

How? "Ask him to look up to the sky, as far as he can see, don't think about the fight."

Friday, there was a bright big moon up there as Pacquiao mused on the veranda. Fine. But Saturday night, there were thick clouds hovering. No moon, and not a single star up there, either.

Tell him some jokes, make him relax, send him to sleep, Chan repeats.

Sorry, it's goodbye forever to the world's most loving mother, who sang the sweetest lullaby here.

Pacquiao happy to be underdog

By Recah Trinidad

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA—Manny Pacquiao yesterday said that, instead of being pressured and bothered, he has actually been buoyed up by the betting trend in Las Vegas where he was pegged a 10-8 underdog Saturday in the sportsbook windows.

The truth, he confided to the INQUIRER after a Filipino food lunch at the Max's Restaurant in Glendale, is that he has loaded up in power, speed and technique, a fact that cannot be reflected in betting preferences.

For example, Pacquiao said, his right hand has grown doubly strong and effective, a big jump from last year when this was hardly used in his first encounter with Erik Morales.

It was like this: In the first encounter against Morales, Pacquiao's vaunted left was something like 90 percent, with the right proving to be only half as effective.

So, from 50 percent against Morales last time out, has the right fist improved by another 30 or 40 percent?

"Di ko masabi (Hard to say), but sure ako, mas malakas ngayon ang kanan ko (but I'm sure my right is now stronger)," Pacquiao confided after acknowledging a horde of autograph hunters, who also requested for photographs with their boxing idol in the restaurant.

Pacquiao headed straight to Max's, one of his favorite eating places here, where he tendered a feast of beef nilaga, kare-kare, daing na bangus, bistik Tagalog for team members and their friends, straight from Sunday morning Mass at the Christ the King church on North Rossmore.

Earlier, trainer Freddie Roach confirmed that he has injected changes into Pacquiao's arsenal, which had proved inferior against the crafty and vastly experienced Morales during their first encounter at the MGM Grand last March.

"Manny's in great shape, he's more focused, he has power in both hands," Roach said.

He said they have studied the defects in the last fight, and have worked hard to correct these.

"Mentally, he's more prepared this time around," Roach added.

But what should add up to the quiet optimism in the RP group here is the fact that Pacquiao is a tested, great underdog fighter.

He scored his biggest win as an awful underdog when he stopped reigning WBC super featherweight king Marco Antonio Barrera in 2003.

He jolted, stopped and dethroned world super bantamweight champion Lehlo Ledwaba of Africa coming in as a last-minute substitute in 2001.

Pacquiao came in from the cold to stop Chatchai Sasakul of Thailand to annex the WBC flyweight title in December 1998.

But against Morales last year, when he entered the ring an overwhelming favorite, Pacquiao proved unworthy of the lofty billing as he lost the first battle.

"Ito iyon, this is actually what we've been waiting for, maging dehado (to be the underdog)," explained Buboy Fernandez, Pacquiao's Filipino handler.

Pacquiao was a 7-5 favorite until last Friday. Needless to say, records would show that Pacquiao is fiercer and more dangerous fighting as an underdog.

Filipino hero smells win in late rounds

By Recah Trinidad

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA—MANNY PACQUIAO, who confided he did not have to avoid his favorite dishes in the runup to the official weigh-in, yesterday said he has a hunch he would be able to take out Erik Morales in the latter rounds.

That's considering that Morales will have to practically lead the life of a hunger striker in order to make the 130-lb limit for their second encounter on Jan. 21.

"If Morales comes in over by one pound, he pays me $250,000, but the fight goes on," Pacquiao told his guests at the Max's Restaurant here, thereby confirming an earlier ruling by the Nevada State Boxing Commission.

It's a $250,000 penalty in his favor for every excess pound registered by Morales, Pacquiao said.

It's widely known that the taller Morales, a three-time world champion, had had to agonize and come in like a tubercular penitent in the weigh-in for his previous encounter with Pacquiao last year.

That simply means Morales has to again deprive himself of proper nutrients as the next fight day nears, Pacquiao surmised.

Pacquiao, 27, said that with Morales now older, it would be doubly harder for the 29-year-old Mexican ring craftsman to trim down to 130 lbs.

Claiming he's at his best form, Pacquiao said he plans to sustain pressure with the hope of tiring down Morales in the second half of the 12-round bout.

"I feel he would run out of wind starting the seventh or eighth round," Pacquiao said in Filipino over lunch yesterday.

Pacquiao said one does not have to be a physician in order to understand the cruel chemistry that rumbles in the intestines of a hard worker who doesn't get the right nutrients to sustain his strength.

Ex-Pistons forward replaces Cantrell

Guiao: Torion sacking nothing serious

By June Navarro

TALK 'N TEXT HAS BROUGHT IN Darvin Ham, a member of the 2004 NBA champions Detroit Pistons, as replacement for Damien Cantrell.

Ham who also played for the Milwaukee Bucks, Atlanta Hawks and the Washington Wizards, will be measured today at the PBA offices.

The Phone Pals are currently tied with the Air21 Express after two games of their quarterfinal series in the San Mig Coffee-PBA Fiesta Conference.

The Express drew inspiration from Gary David who was voted Player of the Week by the PBA Press Corps.

David averaged 18.75 points as he turned from reliever to starter for the Express, who had earlier ousted San Miguel Beer in a best-of-three wild-card series.

The former Lyceum University star also scored 25 points twice in that "killer stretch," including a 19-point job in the fourth quarter of their Game 1 quarterfinal match which the Phone Pals won.

Meanwhile, Red Bull coach Yeng Guiao dismissed as "nothing serious" his sacking of Jimwell Torion early in Game 2 of the Barako quarterfinal duel with the Alaska Aces also Sunday.

"It was nothing serious," said Guiao, who sent his prized playmaker home after the first quarter.

Guiao got piqued by Torion's nonchalant reaction after berating him for committing turnovers in the first quarter.

"I guess his (Torion) reaction somehow peeved me and I told him that this is not the game that he would be participating in anymore," said Guiao.

"He's (Torion) not the type of player who will disrespect or run in conflict with his coach," said Guiao.

SEA Games Cebu chief sacked over unpaid bills

By Musong R. Castillo

JONATHAN GUARDO, CHAIR OF THE CEBU Southeast Asian Games Organizing Committee (Cebusoc), was recently fired as chair of the city's sports commission over unpaid bills incurred during the last Southeast Asian Games.

But Guardo blamed Cebusoc's counterpart, the Philippine SEAG Organizing Committee (Philsoc), for his dismissal from the agency that is the counterpart of the Philippine Sports Commission in Manila.

"I was fired even though the root of the problem was Philsoc," Guardo said in a telephone interview. "There's no one but himself (Jose 'Peping' Cojuangco, Philsoc president) to blame."

The Cebusoc, which was supposed to get a subsidy of P19.8 million from the PSC and Philsoc for hosting seven events, owes various entities close to P2 million for accommodations as well as food and beverage expenses during the last SEAG.

Guardo had issued post-dated checks after the Games and waited in vain for the Philsoc to fund those checks.

The Cebusoc is awaiting the release of about P1.8 million more from the Philsoc.

"We're worried, they might not be able to remit the (P1.8 million)," Guardo said.

The Greenies, who swept all four divisions in the fifth edition of the meet at Valley last October, will again be represented by a combined contingent with La Salle branches in Green Hills and Zobel banner their campaign in the grade school and high school divisions and Taft competing in college play.

Ateneo will try to play the spoiler's role against their arch rivals.

There are 29 schools represented in the 54-hole tourney backed chiefly by Samsung Electronics Phils., Inc. and co-sponsored by Tokyo Tokyo, KZG, Sunbolt, Rudy Project, C-Lium Fiber, Pacsports and Sports Plus. Media partners are Wave 89.1, Jam 88.3, 89.9, 99.5 RT, 103.5 K-Lite and Killer Bee.

Defending the team crowns are LSGH for the overall plum, La Salle Taft for the boys' college and mixed high school and girls' titles and LSGH for the boys' elementary. Reedley guns for a repeat in the girls' elementary division.

Each boasting triple threats, Harbour Centre and Hapee-PCU dispute the remaining quarterfinal bonus in the PBL Heroes Cup today at the San Andres Gym.

The winner of the 3:30 p.m. match claims the fourth spot and the remaining twice-to-beat edge in the quarterfinal round.

Rain or Shine and Magnolia Ice Cream already advanced to the semifinals after dominating the eight-team conference.

The Elasto Painters posted the best record at 8-3, while the Wizards slipped to second place at 7-4 after a surprising three-game skid.

It is a virtual best-of-three series between the Portmasters and the Teethmasters as they will also clash in the other quarterfinal matchup.

Zamar finds new job as Indon coach

BOYSIE ZAMAR, THE COACH OF the national team formed by the Basketball Association of the Philippines, yesterday left for Indonesia to resume a career that has been mothballed because of the country's suspension by the international basketball federation (Fiba).

With the help of BAR Zamar was able to secure a 12-month contract with the Panasia Garuda team in the Indonesian Basketball League worth $2,000 a month.

"I need this for a change," Zamar, who coached the last SEAG-winning RP squad in 2003 in Vietnam, told the INQUIRER in a text message before boarding his 2 p.m. flight yesterday.

"I will resume my coaching career there and will be back again soon," he added in Filipino.

"He's got mouths to feed. Nothing is happening with his career here," Ed Ponceja, Zamar's agent, told reporters.

Applause for Air21

WHATEVER HAPPENS NOW TO Air21, I couldn't care less. The fact that it has reached the quarterfinals of the San Mig Coffee-PBA Fiesta Conference is more than enough reason to jubilate for the Express.

Look, Air21 has leveled its best-of-five quarterfinal series with Talk 'N Text at 1-1, and if that's not big for you, I don't know what is. For Air21 to have gone this far, why cheers to that.

I imagine Bert Lina and Lito Alvarez, Air21's 1-2 management punch, to be exchanging high-fives no end when the Express bundled out defending champion San Miguel Beer in the wild card phase of the eliminations.

If they had been over-generous and given their boys more than a pat on the back following the Express' series-equaling victory over the Phone Pals on Sunday, I wouldn't be surprised.

Hey, isn't it only a while back that Air21 was the object of ridicule, short of being the butt of all jokes, because of a management policy to have the Air21 coach field in all of the team's 12 players during every game?

That policy has cost innumerable woes for the team, not to mention coaching careers falling by the wayside.

The distinguished Joe Lipa left the team not exactly a happy man as Air21 struggled continually under his tutelage.

Bong Ramos likewise would soon pack his bags and move to Talk 'N Text—not even his years of coaching in Indonesia helping Air21 any during his brief stint as the Express coach.

So odd indeed, if not eerie, is the must-use-all 12 players dictum that Air 21 management would soon find replacements for Lipa and Ramos hard to come by as even coaches really in need of a job shunned offers to handle the team.

It seemed like a kiss of death once you became the Air21 coach.

Only Bo Peralas, perhaps driven by youthful idealism, emerged in the end as the only taker, bucking catcalls coming his way when he finally accepted the coaching job after a thorough soul-searching.

SPECTATOR

A.I.S.
Mendoza

When he finally accepted it, the GenSan City-born Peralas was quoted as saying, "I'll give it a try."

Last time I talked to him at the Ynares Center in Antipolo City, Bo Peralas, then very new at his post, said, "I have a formula for this team to make the policy click."

I never bothered to ask about his formula, but whatever that is, I guess it's doing him wonders now, and every jobless coach might now wish the formula had been his.

In tomorrow's Game 3 to break the 1-1 deadlock, I will watch with bated breath how Air21 will try to score a second straight victory. Of course, it won't be easy sailing as usual for Air21, knowing fully well how tough Talk 'N Text can be. But whatever the outcome, I'd be clapping this early already.

As I said, Air21 getting this far is enough reason for me to express my admiration for the Express.

FASTBREAK. Ceferino "Pino" Tenganas, my childhood mentor whom everybody now calls "That Man From Hawaii," is in town together with his wife, Atchie Ancing. The couple will join the Grand Reunion of Batch '56 of the Mangatarem High School on Jan. 21 at the Mangatarem (Pangasinan) Auditorium. Dr. Eddie Olegario and his wife, Manang Amy, had gone to my brother's house in Toronto, Canada, several months ago to campaign support for the affair, which will fete the first batch of graduates from the high school where I myself had been graduated from just a while back. Tom Garcia, my neighbor-buddy in the olden days in Mangatarem now based in Cagayan de Oro, and now New York-based Renato and Muriel Valdez are joining the party, too. Cheers!

NCO organizers see bigger, better roster

CALATAGAN, BATANGAS—Organizers of the National Caddies' Open expect a bigger field in the 2006 edition that starts at the Calatagan layout here next month.

Benjamin Abalos, a former caddy who is one of the inspirations of the tournament, and sportsman Hermie Esguerra, co-chairs of the NCO, see the next pool of talents coming from the event to be better in caliber.

"The turnout of participants we had for last year was enormous," the duo said. "Now that everyone knows that his program can truly help, we expect no less than the best players to enter the tournament."

This year's staging will be wider in scope despite the age limit of 25 and under, as the NCO will allow sons of caddies, golf course employees like greens and grounds-keepers and driving range tee boys to compete.

Aside from certified true copies of their birth certificates, participants will also have to give certifications signed by the managers of the golf clubs they will represent.

Nomination forms will be given next week. They can be faxed to the NCO secretariat at Calatagan: 0919-5470619 or Wack Wack: 027238556 on or before Feb. 10.

The tournament will play its first two rounds in Calatagan before playing the third 18 at Canlubang in Laguna and the final round at Wack Wack in Mandaluyong.

Malarayat tilt stakes Vios

LIPA CITY—A BRAND-NEW Toyota Vios will be up for grabs for anyone that scores an ace in the 8th Mount Malarayat Chairman's Cup set at the complex's three nines on Jan. 28.

Architect Antonio Turalba, chair of the Malarayat which was the site of the 89th Philippine Open last year, is inviting all members to join the 18-hole tournament.

Turalba added that guests can walk in to sign up.

"The Chairman's Cup has always been open to everyone," Turalba said. "We expect to top last year's field of more than 120."

Registration is winding down at the club's offices with members to be charged P1,500 and guests P3,000, inclusive of one practice round and giveaways that include an 18-hole gift certificate.

Trips for two to exotic destinations, including Bangkok, Thailand, and Korea, will be raffled off during the awards ceremonies that will fetter a total of six division champions.

Participants are required to submit either certified National Golf Association of the Philippines or IPI Handicap indices for January.

Toms cruises to 5-stroke win

HONOLULU, HAWAII—DAVID TOMS seized sole possession of the lead with a birdie at the first hole and never looked back Sunday, rolling to a five-stroke victory at the $4.8 million Sony Open.

Toms started the day tied for the lead with Chad Campbell. But he made only one bogey in an assured five-under-par 65 at Waialea Country Club.

Two months after undergoing a relatively routine heart procedure, he finished at 19-under 261, collecting his 12th PGA Tour victory. Toms enhanced his reputation as a front-runner, extending his record to 8-3 when taking a lead into the final round.

Campbell carded a 70 for 266, finishing tied for second with South African Rory Sabbatini who posted an impressive 62.

For the 39-year-old Toms, the victory was especially satisfying in the wake of the heart scare that sent him to hospital during a tournament in Pennsylvania and eventually saw him have surgery in November.

Venus glow fades; Davenport sizzles

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA—WIMBLEDON champion Venus Williams was knocked out of the Australian Open in the first round Monday, losing 2-6, 6-0, 9-7 to Bulgaria's Tsvetana Pironkova, ranked 94th.

It was only the third time in 34 Grand Slam tournaments that the five-time major winner has lost in the opening round.

The 10th-seeded Williams had 65 unforced errors, including 41 in the third set, as she struggled to control her groundstrokes in her first tour-level event since September.

Top-ranked Lindsay Davenport cruised to a 6-2, 6-1 win over Australian wild card entry Casey Dellacqua, ranked No. 180.

Maria Sharapova, the 2004 Wimbledon champion, had 20 winners and only faced one break point as she beat Germany's Sandra Kloesel, 6-2, 6-1, in 59 minutes.

No. 9 Elena Dementieva was the first seeded player ousted. The 24-year-old Russian, a semifinalist at the last US Open, lost 7-5, 6-2 to Germany's Julia Schurr.

On the men's side, Masters Cup champ David Nalbandian, seeded No. 4, bested Thai qualifier Danai Udomchoke, 6-2, 6-2, 1-6, 6-7 (4), 6-1.

Eighth-seeded Gaston Gaudio, the 2004 French Open champ, was leading 6-2, 5-0 when Romania's Razvan Sabau retired with an injured right elbow. No. 7 Ivan Ljubicic also advanced. AP

Raptors break Knicks' streak

TORONTO—JALEN ROSE scored a season-high 31 points and the Toronto Raptors reached a franchise-high in points in ending New York's six-game winning streak with a 129-103 rout in the NBA on Sunday.

Morris Peterson added a season-high 28 and Chris Bosh had 23 for the Raptors, who surpassed the previous record of 128 points—done twice.

At Portland, Oregon, Ruben Patterson and Zach Randolph each had 16 points and seven rebounds and Portland edged Cleveland, 89-87.

LeBron James had 29 points, 13 rebounds and seven assists for the Cavaliers.

At Sacramento, California, Mike Bibby finished his career-high 42 points with two free throws with 0.4 seconds left, and Sacramento held off Orlando, 104-100.

Who will be the next 'American Idol'?

By Kathryn L. Reyes

WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

The search for the next "American Idol" has begun, and the reality show starts airing on worldwide television tomorrow.

One thing about this wildly popular program: It has made celebrities out of some non-winners as well.

Remember William "She Bangs" Hung? He didn't even make it past the auditions in Season 3 (2004) but he was the first from that batch to cut a double-CD. He made television history just by being annoyingly funny! TVguide.com recently reported that the infamous hopeful is on No. 80 of the website's "100 Most Unexpected TV Moments."

Another also-ran who continues to be very visible is Clay Aiken. Voted the Most Loved Star of All Time From a Reality Show in an online poll, his last TV appearance was on Diane Sawyer's "Good Morning America."

Aiken was runner-up to Ruben Studdard in Season 2, but his album sales and fan base have surpassed Studdard's.

Meanwhile, Studdard's debut album, "Soulful," released in 2003, shot up to No. 1 on the Billboard chart in its first week. "Superstar," a single from that album, earned Studdard a Grammy award nomination in 2004. He also recorded a gospel album that made No. 20 in Bill-

Trade mission eyes 'big market' for film products

By Marinel R. Cruz

VIC DEL ROSARIO, movie producer and presidential consultant for entertainment, has sent a representative to join former president Fidel Ramos on a trade mission to India to "explore possibilities of selling Filipino [film] products to Indian viewers."

Del Rosario reported this to INQUIRER Entertainment in an interview last week. Ramos' 25-member team flew to India on Jan. 15 to attend the "Partnership Summit 2006" in Calcutta.

"There's a big market there for Pinoy films and TV shows," said Del Rosario, also the executive producer of Viva Entertainment Inc. "We're hoping to learn from them as well. India has many experts in animation, among many other specializations. Indian artists provide the technical requirements of most Asian films."

Del Rosario noted that India is the home of Bollywood movies, world-famous Hindi-language films from Mumbai. In fact, India's movie industry has the largest output in the world. "We hope to buy some of those films and show them in our country," he said.

Last November, Del Rosario inked a three-year deal with World Media Entertainment for the airing next month in Malaysia, Indonesia and board's Top 200 chart.

The very first 'Idol,' Kelly Clarkson, recently won the People's Choice Award for Favorite Female Singer and has been nominated for Best Female Pop Performance in the forthcoming Grammy Awards. Her first album, "Thankful," debuted at No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100 and her second album, "Breakaway," has gone five times platinum. Seeing an edgier Clarkson in her latest work, critics agree she's here to stay.

Worthy of stardom

Season 3 champ Fantasia Barrino was nominated in last year's Vibe Magazine Awards for R&B Voice of the Year. She lost to Mariah Carey. And though it took a while before she released her first album—she is also the only AI winner whose debut album did not land the charts in its first week—she received four Grammy nominations and two American Music Award nods last year. Now she goes by the single name Fantasia. She has also written "Life Is Not A Fairytale," her autobiography.

Fantasia's batchmate, Fil-Am Jasmine Trias, made it to top three in the 2004 edition. Born to Filipino parents and raised in Hawaii, Jasmine came home to big-time endorsement deals right after her AI stint. Her self-titled debut album was released in the US last year.

Her latest appearance on local TV was on the "Promdi" episode of "Extra Challenge" where she was made to catch frogs in a swamp.

Rockers on AI

Last year's AI marked the entry of rock 'n' roll to the largely pop show. Two contestants led this refreshing change—Bo Bice, who finished second, and Constantine Maroulis.

Bice has since gotten married, become a father and undergone a major surgery. He also released his first album, "The Real Thing," where he collaborated with Bon Jovi's Richie Sambora and Nickelback's Dan Kroeger, and which made it to No. 4 of Billboard's albums chart last month. Carrie Underwood, last season's winner, was on No. 2. Maroulis visited the Philippines last November to star in a series of mall shows.

Back in the US, Maroulis is now doing a TV sitcom on ABC. TV acting should come easy for this New Yorker with a Broadway background.

Underwood again beat Bice in Billboard's countdown last month. Her "Inside Your Heaven" quickly became the Top-Selling Hot 100 Song of the Year and Top-Selling Country Single of the Year. She was also 2005's Country Single Sales Artist of the Year. Oklahoma Today magazine also named her "2005 Oklahoman of the Year."

Cashing in on her good looks as well, Carrie has announced on her website that she will appear in a prom pictorial on Cosmo magazine's Winter/Spring 2006 Prom Collection.

"American Idol" itself was 2005's People's Choice Awardee for Favorite Reality Show Competition. Small wonder, then, that thousands of hopefuls turned up as usual in seven US cities where auditions for this season were held.

And as AI host Ryan Seacrest says after every episode, "Who will be the next American Idol?"

There's only one way to find out.

"American Idol" will be aired live on Star World, Wednesdays and Thursdays starting tomorrow at 6 p.m. (live via satellite) and 8 p.m. (prime time replay). ABC 5 airs it on the same days at 10 p.m.

I AM NOT WRITING THIS AS JUST ANOTHER guessing-game material. It's too sensitive to be lumped with the usual blind items. I got quite affected when a network insider told me the sad, sad story. This should serve as a warning for people who become obsessed with some movie stars, bordering on fatal attraction. It must also be a wake-up call for stars who give their admirers false hopes. Then again, this also happens to ordinary people.

Here's the tragic story: A young actress and the lesbian assistant director of her telenovela were secretly going steady. Of course they didn't want to jeopardize her love team with a matinee idol/actor. The assistant director used to go out with a model/host and a morning show segment host also from the same network. Soon enough, the young actress wanted out. It devastated the AD, who committed suicide—but not before she called the actress to say goodbye. I wonder how this actress can wear a happy face on cam and live with the guilt. The actress has yet to talk with the AD's family to resolve matters. Ahhh! Love can sometimes be the ultimate tragedy.

Is it true that Jennylyn Mercado's manager Becky Aguila is spreading rumors that Marian Rivera (Mark Herras' current squeeze) already has a kid? Is she out to spite Mark, who happens to be the ex of her ward Jen, because Mark is vocal about his love for Marian? Jen has said that she's gotten over Mark. How can she move on if her manager can't seem to remove Mark from the picture? Move and remove, girl!

Heard from my friends at GMA 7's newsroom that my "crush," newscaster Ivan Mayrina got hitched to his longtime girlfriend Karen (a Kyla look-alike). That crushed my heart (he...he...) and I'm sure a lot of Ivan's

'Text votes' compromise

WHEN TALENT COMPETITIONS BECAME popular on television, the winners and losers were decided on by experts tapped to serve as judges. So, the major problems were the qualifications, objectivity and incorruptibility of those jurors.

These days, however, the judging equation has been made more complex with the inclusion of "text votes" from viewers.

The "logic" of this development is quite clear: Since talent searches are supposed to discover tomorrow's stars whom the public will embrace, the public should have a hand in choosing the winners of those talent tilts.

Trouble is, in some instances, the text votes a leading contestant gets don't really reflect what the viewing public wants!

The reason for this is the expensive ploy of some candidates' relatives, friends and other backers: they themselves pay for hundreds and even thousands of text votes, to make sure that their bet wins.

So, the text votes don't necessarily denote popularity, just the loyalty, determination and deep pockets of some contestants' supporters.

Adding to the dubious nature of the text voting component is the fact that it's a money-earner, not just for the phone company, but for the talent search shows as well.

Since more text votes generate greater income, the shows are tempted to raise their competition and controversy quo-tients, so that contestants' backers whipped up to fever pitch, and c and spend more for text votes.

This hyped-up competition subject body involved to excessive stress and ity that youthful contestants shouldn't contend with. The TV station wins, everyone else loses out.

Worst of all, the text vote con flawed as it is, sometimes results serving contestants being hailed ners. Isn't this what talent searches supposed to do?

As a result of the wrong talent chosen as winners, some of the "ous" young performers don't cl well with the audience, and lose t after only a few months. So, the genuine stellar advantage here.

To rectify this unproductive a trary situation, the text vote cor should be rigorously controlled. I be resorted to, its impact should b to only 25 percent of the total verc the experts' decision accounting f remaining 75 percent.

That should inhibit the con for movie stars

Men's Room" is getting very good feedback from viewers about the show's new format. Viewers are hooked on the show's segments on fashion, sports, grooming and, of course, beautiful girls. "Ambushed" is one of them—guys have a chance to know what girls really think about men and what they want.

It's obvious there's very good chemistry between hosts RJ Ledesma and Rovilson Fernandez. It's not surprising, either, that stand-up comedian Mike Unson's segment is being followed by many viewers. This guy is really funny!

Honestly, it is a personal favorite of mine! These three guys click and they make late night TV funny and entertaining. Catch "The Men's Room," Wednesdays, 11:30 p.m. on Studio 23.

Jukebox queens

I ENJOYED pigging out with my beloved colleagues—Tita Crispina Belen, Ian Farinas, Jun Lalin, KC Guerrero and Don Don Sermino—at the birthday bash of Regina Cabral which was also a blessing cum soft opening of Osang's (Wilson St., Greenhills). The resto serves sumptuous food and delicacies from various provinces. I swear their sugpong hipon is the largest and juiciest I have ever tasted!

Boasts Rosanna "Osang" Canlas, one of the owners, along with "Jukebox Queen" Claire de la Fuente: "We not only serve the best-tasting Filipino food; we satisfy cravings for regional delicacies. Different kinds of lechon from Davao, Bacolod and Cebu can be bought or ordered in advance from Osang's."

The other "Jukebox Queens" Eva Eugenio and Imelda Papin have savored the yummy dishes. Truly a feast for a king and/or (jukebox) queen.

talent searches

backers from spending so much money to tilt the voting balance in favor of their bets.

Of course, that doesn't solve the problem some shows have with their "expert" judges. That's another area that urgently cries out for reform.

Talent searches' young contestants deserve to be judged by genuine experts who can reliably and objectively tell which new performer is better than the others.

In addition, the jurors should not be tempted to come up with pithy, colorful, "quotable" put-downs to build up their own cachet as "bitchy" TV personalities. Concentrate on the young contestants and forget about yourself and your gargantuan ego, please!

Also, don't resort to sarcasm or personal attacks, because they could adversely affect a newcomer's psychological well-being. Show business is not a fraternity that young talents should have to be "initiated" into!

Finally, the TV talent search shows have to deal with some people's perception that the choice of finalists and winners could be rigged in favor of some well-connected bets. We hear of some judges themselves who have grumbled about this pressure.

So, from here on in, everything about TV talent searches should be absolutely transparent and above-board. If everyone involved hews strictly to that bottom line, talent searches' decisions will gain the respect of the viewing public, as they must.

Del Rosario said, he is also intent on forming an organization that would help unite independent and stream film producers.

There are two major groups of producers, but most of the members are not active," he explained. "I think it's best to just unite them. [It will be] similar to the association of theater owners in the country. Nag-iisa—kaya mag sila (There's only one, so strong)."

Del Rosario said the new group would hold consultations, facilitated by "producers, on how the industry could be improved. We need to hear them out so that when conflicts arise, we could easily find ways to solve it," he said.

In his latest report to Malaya, Del Rosario proposed, among others, that Big Foot Entertainment, the Hollywood production company in Cebu, be granted exemptions from import taxes and duties on film equipment.

"The president has finally [accepted] our request," said Del Rosario.

Big Foot Entertainment has invested $30 million to operate a school and world-class sound stage on Mactan Island. It is "willing to invest $120 million more," Del Rosario said in an earlier inter-

Decreasing gov't borrowings to push down rates

By Michelle V. Remo

TREASURY BILL RATES DROPPED ACROSS ALL tenors yesterday, with the bellwether 91-day bill registering its lowest rate since August 2002.

The bellwether 91-day T-bill rate fell to 4.863 percent—9.8 basis points lower than the previous rate of 4.961 percent—as the market remained awash with cash while it expected tightening of supply of government securities.

The 182-day bill fetched a rate of 6.314 percent, 12.1 basis points lower than last week's 6.435 percent. The rate for the 364-day bill slid by 11 basis points to 7.289 percent from the previous rate of 7.399 percent.

"The same market sentiments have been driving the rates downward," National Treasurer Omar Cruz told reporters after yesterday's weekly T-bill auction.

The treasurer was referring to expectations that the government would have improved its fiscal position.

Cruz earlier said the government's budget deficit for 2005 could have fallen to below P160 billion, much better than the deficit ceiling of P180 billion set for last year.

Official data on the 2005 budget deficit would be released next week.

The decreasing budget deficit has allowed the government to trim its borrowing requirements. Cruz said the Bureau of Treasury would adjust the domestic borrowing program originally set for the first quarter of this year, in light of the positive fiscal developments.

The Treasury was supposed to borrow P75 billion from the domestic market, by floating T-bills and bonds, in the first quarter. Cruz said the new domestic borrowing program for the first three-month period would be announced in the next few days.

The decreasing need for government borrowings matches the lingering high level of liquidity among banks. Cruz said this gives more room for interest rates to further slide.

Cruz noted that this week alone, there is already a huge mismatch on demand and supply of government securities.

RP posted BOP surplus of $2.41B in 2005

By Doris C. Dumlaog

STRONG FOREIGN EXCHANGE inflows, which catapulted the peso's value against the US dollar in 2005, have allowed the Philippines to post a balance of payments surplus of $2.41 billion against a deficit of $280 million incurred in 2004.

Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas Governor Amando Tetangco Jr. yesterday said the strong surplus was "due to the double-digit growth in OFW (overseas Filipino workers) remittances, strong inflows of foreign direct investments and portfolio investments, government borrowings and high investment income (from offshore ventures)."

For the month of December alone, when OFW remittances peaked for the holidays, the country yielded a BOP surplus of $273 million, reversing the deficits seen in the two previous months.

The BOP windfall for this year exceeded the expectations of the BSP, which earlier targeted a surplus of only $853 million this year.

The BOP measures the foreign exchange transactions between the domestic economy and the rest of the world. Its major components are the current account and the capital and financial account.

Net foreign portfolio investments, or those placed in local stocks, debt papers and bank products, surged to $2.1 billion in 2005.

Foreign direct investments surged 64.4 percent to a net of $863 million from January to October 2005 versus a year ago.

PDIC to sell 45,000 PLDT shares

PHILIPPINE DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORP. yesterday issued a notice to sell a block of 45,475 shares of Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. previously held by 18 banks, mostly rural banks, that were closed by the deposit insurer.

PDIC said it would entertain sealed offers for the PLDT shares on or before Jan. 27 and that it would only accept cash.

Big blocks came from Philippine Investment System Organization or Piso Bank, 12,680 shares; Prime Bank Inc., 11,850 shares; Commonwealth Savings and Loan Bank, 8,320 shares; Pacific Banking Corp., 3,975 shares; Homeowner's Savings and Loan Association, 3,150 shares and Peninsula Development Bank, 1,350 shares.

Others have between 80 and 950 shares of PLDT.

The PLDT shares were covered by 204 stock certificates.

Strong peso, repayments cut gov't debt in October

THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT'S LEVEL OF debt slid month-on-month by 2 percent to P3.95 trillion as of end-October last year, as the improving fiscal situation eased its need for borrowings.

The debt figure, if divided among the estimated 85.2 million Filipinos, would mean that each citizen would have a share of P46,361 in the government's liabilities, which was lower than the P47,183 in September.

The lower government debt level meant that it retired more liabilities than what it incurred during the month.

The decline in the debt figure represented a reversal of the 2-percent increase in September, when the government sold $1 billion in global bonds and P44 billion in retail Treasury bonds.

Data from the Department of Finance showed that of the P3.95 trillion in debt, domestic borrowings accounted for P2.146 trillion while foreign debt made up P1.805 trillion.

Domestic debt as of October was 0.1 percent higher than the September level, but foreign debt was 3.7 percent lower than the month-ago figure.

The DOF said the decline in foreign debt was also due to the appreciation of the peso and other currencies against the US dollar, which eased the debt burden by about P8 billion.

The peso-dollar rate used in settling debts in September was pegged P56:$1, while the rate used in October was P55.05:$1.

Of the domestic debt, P2.116 trillion was raised through the issuance of government securities while the rest came from loans contracted by line agencies and assumed by the national government.

Of the foreign liabilities, P1.06 trillion represented proceeds from the sale of foreign-denominated securities, such as US dollar, Japanese yen- and euro-denominated bonds. The rest were loans contracted by line agencies and assumed by the government, including official development assistance.

DOF data also showed that the government's contingent liabilities reached P602 billion, up from the September level of P597 billion. Contingent debt represents borrowings made by line agencies or state-owned firms that were guaranteed by the national government. It becomes part of the government's debt if the borrowing entities are declared in default.

National Treasurer Omar Cruz said earlier the fiscal situation was expected to further improve the government's debt standing. A decreasing budget deficit would reduce the government's need to borrow, while a balanced budget would steadily reduce the government's debt level.

According to the DOF, the budget deficit for 2005 was expected to have remained between P160 billion and P165 billion, way below the ceiling of P180 billion.

 CENTER FOR CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

Reinventing CSR Program

February 6-10, 2006
 AIM Conference Center Manila

COVERAGE OF PROGRAM

The Asian Institute of Management - Ramon V. del Rosario, Sr. Center for Corporate Responsibility is pleased to offer the REINVENTING CSR PROGRAM from February 6 to 10, 2006 at the AIM Conference Center Manila.

Become different by making a difference

How can you make your brand stand out and drive your company's success?

To be on top of the corporate ladder, companies need more than financial growth. The future of companies depends on reputation, human resources management, and community relations — factors that impact investor confidence, employee loyalty, capital access, and consumer behavior. Business success nowadays is judged not only on business performance but, more importantly, how it behaves in society.

Reinventing CSR is a five-day program intended to guide companies in designing and implementing strategies that can optimize both business and social performance. Corporate social responsibility (CSR) is becoming the mainstream business philosophy of today, and this program will assist companies to do the right thing in a way that is good for business. It is about finding business opportunities out of addressing the basic needs of the people.

The main thrusts of the Reinventing CSR Program centers on the formulation and implementation of the right CSR strategy that can differentiate the company's brand and enhance its reputation in the market by supporting a social cause aligned to the mission and goals of the company.

This is a practical and systematic program for companies that are new in the field of CSR, and for practitioners who want to improve their current CSR initiatives. The curriculum of the program will cover five major aspects:

- 1. Introduction to CSR - Provides an overview on what CSR is, why companies are doing it, how to conduct a stakeholder analysis, and what kinds of CSR initiatives are being practiced.
- 2. Developing CSR Strategies - Focuses on how to strategically design CSR programs that are aligned to the company's vision, mission, business goals, and values.
- 3. Strategies for Implementation - Identifies how a company can implement the CSR program it wants, the possible ways of implementing a CSR program, and solutions to implementation issues.
- 4. Measuring Performance - Discusses measurement tools to determine the success and failure of the CSR program or areas where improvements are needed, and whether the intended results have been achieved.
- 5. Project Presentation - Participants will present a group project on their own CSR strategy, incorporating what they have learned throughout the program.

The Reinventing CSR Program is intended for companies and non-governmental organizations in the Asia-Pacific Region that are interested in good corporate citizenship and sustainable development.

Thoughts on the Cha-cha

PROCTER AND GAMBLE IS TAKING a gamble in expanding its factory producing baby's diapers. So we must be at the bottom.

In Pattaya, I again decided to have a foot massage as it helped me so much last year. There are many parlors with up to 50 chairs and attendants, and at night, they are filled with tourists. The standard charge is 200 baht (P240) for one hour, and they use acupressure. One night, in a side street, I saw an empty parlor advertising 'foot massage, 100 baht.' Unable to resist a bargain, I went in and guess what—they only massaged one foot.

In the hotel, we had a jacuzzi. When my daughter was asleep, my wife and I decided to take a bath together. Suddenly, she looked down at me and said, "too big." I was flattered, of course, but replied, "after 10 years of marriage, you are complaining?" "No, you idiot. Tubing means water." I was deflated.

I went into a record store and asked the salesgirl if she had any classical records. She gave me Roll Over Beethoven, a film about a dog. When I explained this to her, she gave me Cat Stevens in Concert. That really hurt my felines. Finally, in despair, she handed me Eminem, which even I know are chocolates. Does any store have CDs on Les Miserables, symphonies and concertos of Mozart and other 18th century composers?

All my stories have an element of truth in them, except that they are exaggerated for dramatic effect, hopefully to amuse you.

means that the Phisix lost its direction and began to consolidate. This is not surprising, given some of the political statements made last Friday when FVR asked GMA to cut short her Presidency. Since then, there seems to have been a healing, but it depends on which newspaper you read.

I would guess that GMA is determined to finish her term so the next question is whether there will be a parliamentary system, and whether elections will go ahead in 2007. I see no reason why they should not, as it is in the Constitution. In any case, a change in the system is unlikely to take place before 2010 because it needs careful planning.

In the French system, there is a president and a prime minister. The word prime means first, so he is the top man. However, at the recent meeting of the EU, President Chirac represented France and negotiated toughly, refusing to give up any form of subsidies, even though the UK reduced its rebate. The French President is no symbol, he has power, so who is the true leader?

Confusion in authority became evident late last year when Muslims complained of being discriminated against and treated as second class citizens, even though they had European passports. They continued setting fire to hundreds of cars every night for over a week while a confused, inept government looked on, uncertain what to do. A country can only have one leader, so the British system is better.

We have had a parliamentary system since about 1350 and it works very well. Each of about 680 districts elects a representative from one of three parties: Labor, Conservative or Liberal. Unlike the US and the Philippines, personalities are of far less importance than policies. Margaret Thatcher was elected three times despite being overbearing and condescending. Nobody liked her, even her own party, and her opponents feared her. Yet she was the greatest Prime Minister of the 20th century. She single-handedly wiped out Communism and de-nationalized industries so that they become profitable. I greatly admire her and I am saddened by her frailty after several strokes.

Our present Prime Minister, Tony Blair, is good-looking and very charismatic. He is a great speaker, much like Bill Clinton, but with higher moral standards. Yet he is very unpopular because he supported President Bush in the war against Iraq. The majority of the population was against it, more so, after the London bombings wherein 66 people died. Because of his personal unpopularity, even within his party, the Labor Party won a third term but with a substantially reduced majority. Nevertheless, it still governs effectively and the UK had 43 successive quarters of growth in GDP, probably a record for any country.

While France has a weak economy, double-digit unemployment and dependence on the rest of Europe to subsidize its inefficient system of farming, the UK has a strong, though faltering economy, and its rate of unemployment is only half that of France of Germany. Probably, staying out of the Euro, and keeping the pound helped.

SMC food unit sues Swift for P126M in debt

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

SAN MIGUEL FOODS INC. (SMFI), THE FOOD and beverage arm of San Miguel Corp., has asked the Pasig Regional Trial Court to compel Swift Foods Inc. to pay P126 million worth of assorted broiler feeds it acquired from SMFI.

In its complaint, SMFI said Swift had paid only P69.7 million out of the P188 million it owed SMFI.

Swift president Luis Bernardo Concepcion told INQUIRER in a brief telephone interview that the company was recognizing its debt of P126 million with SMFI. He said the company was not able to pay the amount because its operations were hurt by the bird flu scare that dampened the poultry market two years ago.

"We hope we can settle this amicably. I am quite optimistic we can settle this in a gentlemanly manner," Concepcion said.

Including interest payments, Swift's total obligations had already reached P126 million as of October 2005.

In September 2004, SMFI agreed to supply and deliver broiler feeds to Swift. It extended a 60-day credit limit to the buyer. Under their agreement, any unpaid amount in excess of the 60-day term extended by SMFI will be subject to cost of money at the rate of 1.5 percent a month until fully paid.

Between September 2004 and February 2005, SMFI delivered P188 million worth of broiler feeds to Swift's manufacturing plants in Bulacan, Isabela, Cagayan de Oro, Cebu, General Santos and Zamboanga.

The bulk went to SMC/B3

Peza OKs 11 projects worth P307M

By Ronnel W. Domingo

THE PHILIPPINE ECONOMIC ZONE Authority said it had approved the registration of 11 projects worth P307 million in the first 10 days of the year.

Peza Director General Lilia de Lima said the projects included two economic zone developments and nine information technology-based services and manufacturing of products for export.

The biggest projects were those of economic zone developer Jovima Management and Development involving the operation and maintenance of a P115-million, seven-story building and a P79.7-million, four-story building.

Also approved was a P34.7-million back office transaction processing operation, a P32-million manufacturing facility for protective tapes and films for liquid crystal displays, and P24.6 million contact call center.

Peza declined to give further details, saying this was subject to the express permission of the companies involved.

De Lima said the total cost of the investments approved was 57 percent higher than the P196.5 million registered in the first 10 days of 2005.

Trade Secretary Peter B. Favila recently announced that projects approved by Peza and the Board of Investments reached a total of P231 billion last year, an increase of about 24 percent from the P186.3 billion posted in 2004.

Favila also said the amount was 10 percent higher than the 2005 target of P210 billion.

Ongpin firm investing P14B in 3G venture

Partnership with Hong Kong's Hutchison Whampoa Ltd. seen

By Clarissa S. Batino

CONNECTIVITY UNLIMITED Resources Inc. (Cure), controlled by former trade minister Roberto Ongpin, said he would infuse up to P13.7 billion into its third-generation or 3G mobile venture in the first four years of its operations.

Cure was one of the four companies (and the only new player) that received the 3G license and frequency bands from the National Telecommunications Commission. Smart Communications Inc., Globe Telecom Inc., Digitel Mobile Phils. Inc. (operator of Sun Cellular) also got 3G permits.

Sources from the NTC said Cure would tie up with Hong Kong's Hutchison Whampoa Ltd., a company controlled by billionaire Li Ka-shing, which is an active 3G player in many countries.

The Ongpin group controls Eastern Telecommunications Phils. Inc. through listed firm ISM Communications Inc. The group also owns Philweb.

Other 3G applicants had questioned the NTC's decision to award Cure a 3G license despite its lack of track record and experience. One of the applicants claimed Cure had failed to comply with the NTC's roll out plan.

The Ongpin company said it would position itself as a "pure 3G operator. It expects to acquire approximately 30 to 35 percent of the early adapters from 2G to 3G in the first three years of service."

Cure's market share was projected to stabilize at 33 percent from the sixth year of operations.

The company is targeting about 750,000 customers in the first year of operations and about three million subscribers on the fifth year. By the 15th year of operations, Cure said it would have about five million 3G users.

The Ongpin telco projected a net income of more than P2 billion by the fourth year of operations from a net loss in the first three years. Profits are expected to grow to more than P8 billion by the sixth year and more than P18 billion by the 15th year.

Revenue targets were set at P8.2 billion for the first year and P40 billion for the fourth year. By the 15th year, revenue is seen to hit P88 billion.

LBP seeks end to Capwire rehab

By Clarissa S. Batino

A RESTLESS CREDITOR OF CAPITAL WIREless Inc. wants to liquidate the firm's remaining assets after failing to service its P1-billion debt in the last five years.

Land Bank of the Philippines asked the Makati court last Jan. 11 to terminate Capwire's rehabilitation plan for its failure to achieve financial goals and, consequently, to pay its creditors.

According to LandBank, Capwire also failed to attract an investor and that it later made an "explicit admission" that the restructuring agreement could not be implemented.

LandBank also justified its move by citing failure of the rehabilitation plan to yield satisfactory results ever since its inception.

"All through the years that the creditors cooperated to rehabilitate [Capwire], the latter miserably failed to show that it can still be rehabilitated," LandBank said in its petition.

Other creditors of Capwire include Development Bank of the Philippines, Bank of the Philippine Islands (having assumed the assets of the former Far East Bank), United Overseas Bank, Philippine National Bank and Export-Industry Bank.

The Santiago family, which controls Capwire and Philippine Telegraph & Telephone Corp., said in October last year that it was seeking new investors for both companies. The family wants a new partner who will infuse P500 million into both Capwire and PT&T.

Maureen Santiago, president of Capwire said the company was in talks with various groups that might put in at least $5 million in fresh capital.

Capwire filed a petition for suspension of payments with the Securities and Exchange Commission in July 2000.

Bulacan where P87.6 million worth of feeds were delivered, followed by Cagayan de Oro, P54.6 million; Cebu, P28.7 million; Isabela, P15.7 million; General Santos, P1.8 million, and Zamboanga, P234,000.

"In gross and wanton violation of its obligations, defendant (Swift) only paid plaintiff (SMFI) the aggregate amount of P69.7 million, leaving an unpaid balance of P126.2 as of Oct. 31. Despite repeated demands, defendant failed and refused, and still fails and refuses to pay plaintiff the unpaid balance," SMFI said in its complaint.

The complaint dated Dec. 16 was filed by SMFI's legal counsel, Anacleto Diaz & Associates.

Last September, Conception-led RFM Corp. said it took Swift Foods out of its books by transferring the shares it holds in the poultry processor to shareholders via issuance of preferred shares.

Mr. Bearbull

During the period preceding an election, all parties are allowed to make 15-minute documentaries on their policies, and there are debates every night with participants of all parties putting forward their point of views on defense, health, education, abortion, cloning, same-sex marriages, and many other contentious topics. Each party prints its manifesto clearly, stating its position on each topic, and this is distributed door-to-door to the electorate. Vote buying is unheard of and the entire election is kept at a low key, all very gentlemanly and British. The results are known within four hours.

In the end, the electorate votes for the party whose manifesto coincides most closely with its own ideas. Personalities are ignored, only policies matter. The situation in the US and here is exactly the opposite. Both countries follow the personality cult and few of the candidates have clear policies or parties. They go into politics for power and the money that goes with it.

Not only does the present system have to change to eliminate the constant gridlock between Congress and the Senate, but the electorate has to vote for candidates with unblemished records, whose wish is to improve the situation of Filipinos, particularly the poorest. Will it ever happen? I don't know. I can only hope.

The $64,000 dollar question is whether the Senate will write its own obituary. Senators are appointed to represent the nation whereas Congressmen only represent their precinct. Senators are fewer in number and receive a substantially higher allowance. Furthermore, they have the power to block the President so there is a system of check and balances.

Will the Senate merge with Congress? I cannot see how it will benefit them. Their rank and remuneration will be reduced and I cannot see what advantage will accrue to them. So, although a shift to a unicameral body would move legislation forward and be beneficial to the nation, I doubt that the Senate will simply surrender its power. mrbearbull@hotmail.com or mrbearbull2010@yahoo.com

Banks' NPL ratio hits 7-yr low

Bad loans contract while total loans extended rise

By Doris C. Dumlaog

THE BAD LOANS-TO-TOTAL LOANS RATIO of Philippine commercial banks dropped to a seven-and-a-half year low of 8.74 percent as of end-November versus 9.65 percent as of end-October, the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas said yesterday.

The month-on-month decline in non-performing loans was made possible by the 4.7-percent contraction in total NPLs alongside the 5.2-percent rise in total loans during the period.

Total NPLs stood at P164.3 billion versus P172.35 billion at the end of October while total loans were reported at P1.88 trillion from P1.79 trillion in the previous month.

Net of interbank loans, the sector's NPL ratio also declined to 10.5 percent from 11.51 percent in the previous month given a 4.5-percent expansion in regular lending.

The banking system's NPL burden fell back to single digit levels in 2005 for the first time in seven years as the special purpose vehicle (SPV) scheme allowed the bulk unloading of bad assets earlier in the year.

The sector's NPL ratio peaked at 18.81 percent in October 2001, but started to ease sharply starting last year as banks scrambled to avail of the SPV Law's incentives. The SPV framework, which expired last April, had allowed banks to clean up about P95 billion in bad assets since last year.

The SPV Law waived some taxes and reduced fees usually collected in the sale or transfer of assets. It waived documentary stamp, capital gains and value added tax while reducing registration and transfer fees by 50 percent.

Restructured loans also dipped as a ratio of total loans to 5.62 percent from 5.99 percent in the previous month on the back of a 1-percent decline in loan restructuring activities. Meantime, with a slower 0.3-percent reduction in non-performing restructured loans over the month, the ratio of non-performing restructured loans to total restructured loans rose to 48.51 percent from 48.15 percent at the end of October.

Debt restructuring can cover a whole range of concessions—including the lengthening of maturity, lowering of interest rates and in extreme cases, the conversion of debt into equity—to give the borrower breathing room and a chance to revive its business.

MWSS seeks $30M to settle Maynilad debts

By Christine A. Gaylican

THE METROPOLITAN WATERWORKS AND Sewerage System will borrow around $30 million from foreign and local banks to settle the obligations of Maynilad Water Services Inc., which will fall due in the first semester.

The MWSS Board of Directors have decided to take out the loan and pay off Maynilad's debts before the new investors take over the water concession in the second half of the year, MWSS sources said.

"The $120-million performance bond that we have tapped from Maynilad will soon run out," a ranking MWSS official explained. "We have to acquire the bridge financing by April."

The MWSS will again request the national government, through the Department of Finance, to back them up when they proceed with the borrowing.

The MWSS last year borrowed close to P10 billion to pay off the unpaid obligations of Maynilad.

The financially ailing Maynilad has not fully paid its concession fees to the MWSS.

The company claims that it is having cash flow problems.

As of 2005, the company paid P800 million in concession fees.

Aside from settling Maynilad's maturing obligations, the MWSS will also use part of the $30-million loan to finance the construction of new water sources and the repair of an aqueduct linking the Umiray-Angat Dam.

The MWSS needs to repair Aqueduct 6 so as not to disrupt the water supply to Metro Manila.

FirstGen eyes IPO price of P51 to P62 per share

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

FIRST GEN CORP., THE HOLDING COMPANY of the Lopez Group's power generation assets, has set the price range for its maiden offering in February at between P51 and P62 a share.

This is narrower than the P51 to P74 per share range earlier reported to the Philippine Stock Exchange.

Based on the prospectus submitted yesterday to the PSE, First Gen will raise P11.2 billion from the sale of 180.9 million to 219.9 million new shares.

Its secondary offering—or the sale of shares from existing shareholders—consists of 125 million shares at the same price range.

First Gen is holding a roadshow to drum up investor interest in the offering up to Jan. 27. The IPO date was set for Feb. 10.

In earlier disclosures, First Gen said it would use a portion of the IPO proceeds to fund future projects, including its plan to bid for electric plants being sold by National Power Corp.

The IPO, along with the secondary offer, will give the investing public ownership of 25.5 to 33.7 percent of FirstGen.

If plans push through, First Gen will be the first company to list on the PSE this year.

In the meantime, a source said First Philippine Holdings Corp., the parent firm of First Gen, was willing to get diluted in the company to 51 percent the present 88 percent.

The art of peaceful thinking

By Pam Pastor

CHARLIE HOGG BEGAN his quest for peace around 30 years ago in Australia by joining marches against his country's participation in the Vietnam war. And his street experience left him with a big realization.

"So many of us who were marching against war were such angry people. We were so aggressive. We were campaigning for peace but we were such peace-less people. And what I realized was that we'd never make a peaceful world with that sort of attitude."

Hogg soon discovered meditation after traveling through Asia, the Middle East and Europe. He realized that it could become his own way of bringing peace to the world.

"Meditation is the simple tool that anyone can use to create peace of mind. It's our personal and powerful contribution to global well-being. I really believe that it's only when we change that the world changes. When I taste peace, when I feel it in my life and I live it in my life, that's the best contribution to peace."

Today, Hogg continues his quest for peace as the director of the Brahma Kumaris Raja Yoga Centers in Australia. He travels the world, sharing his knowledge on meditation, peace and action by speaking at forums, seminars, retreats and workshops—all the way to the United Nations in New York to discuss how to effectively harness peaceful energy for one's self and for those around them.

On a recent visit to the Philippines, he enlightens his audience on how to change the world and their relationships with the help of meditation. After the two-hour session, he answers more questions about Raja Yoga and the good things it can bring to one's life.

"Raja means King, it's sort of the king of the yogas. Yoga aims to discipline your body, your breathing, your mind. Raja Yoga is realizing yourself as a spiritual being, as a soul, and having a deep union of the mind with the supreme soul," he says.

Loving oneself

Hogg says people generally have three responsibilities in life—to the family, to the work and to oneself. But in this fast-paced and crazy world, most people end up neglecting themselves.

Ultimately, Hogg says, meditation is an expression of love for one's self. "It's taking time to see what quality of thoughts you're having in your mind and realizing that the quality of thoughts tend to completely create the quality of your life."

He feels that, deep down, people find it very difficult to respect themselves. "We learn how to be confident, we know how to do things well but that doesn't mean we feel good about who we are. Meditation improves the quality of my relationship with myself. I learn to be more gentle, more respectful and more loving toward myself which I think is a very positive thing in life."

The love for self is an important thing to develop, especially in a world full of people who are constantly being too hard on themselves.

"I've talked to thousands of people in so many countries and I've learned that the internal dialogue is so violent sometimes against the self. I did a dialogue with a Buddhist monk once and we were talking about the seeds of violence. We came to the conclusion that violence starts in the way we treat ourselves. If I treat myself in that way, I'll often use that behavior on others," Hogg says.

Chain reaction

Meditation creates a chain reaction of sorts. Your positive attitude toward yourself will lead you to have a positive attitude toward others and the world.

"It's an art form to learn how to value people, learn what's good about people," says Hogg. "It will improve relationships overnight. When you've mentally learned the virtues, the qualities, the positive things of those around you, they will pick it up and respond to you. The foundation of building positive relationships is knowing the value of others and sustaining that value. When we lack self-respect, we tend to put other people down."

Of course, it's not as easy as it sounds. Hogg admits, "There's no doubt, just like any art, it takes practice."

And efforts will have to be made, especially when external factors make your pursuit for peace of mind extra hard. Hogg says the secret is in not letting things affect you like they normally would.

"Meditation educates you on why you're so influenced by things around you and how you can be less influenced. Most people try to change the things happening around them but it's not possible. You can't change people, you can't change situa-

Australian Charlie Hogg says meditation can bring many good things to your life—a sound mind, freedom from stress, better relationships, even world peace tions to a certain extent. What you can do is reprogram your reactions to people and situations. And that's what meditation teaches us. Not to react so violently internally toward others and even myself and just learn the art of sustaining peaceful thinking."

Dealing with difficult people is another thing that can block your path to peace. But Hogg says it's a matter of choice.

TRUE TO ITS COMMITMENT TO "bring hope along with the promise of a better and brighter tomorrow," this fantastic charity organization, simply called Love 14 Foundation, held its yearly gala presentation of Manila's Five Loveliest at the grand Rizal Ballroom of the Makati Shangri-La Hotel, palanggas. Tons of socio-civic-minded personalities walked on the red carpet to witness this traditional celebration for a good cause.

Five carefully chosen young, beautiful and extremely intelligent girls were proclaimed Manila's Five Loveliest 2006: Marie Elaine Halasan Gomez, Erica Feliz Marquez, Maria Angela Hilado Medella, Jo Christine Lim Napoles and Cristalle Lauren Tupaz-Ranillo. All these gals will serve as ambassadors of charity. They will symbolize hope and the promise of a better life for our less fortunate brothers and sisters, palanggas.

Naturellement, a fabulous event like this had to have the best major sponsors, like internationally renowned Roberto Coin Jewelry, which was represented by Pilar Coin, the attractive wife of Roberto Coin who jetted in just for the occasion. As she watched the girls on stage, she noticed their stylish gowns and I found out they were beautifully designed by two of the country's young top designers, Jun Escario and OJ Hofer. Hair and makeup were done by Studio 546. For entertainment, we watched with delight the hot dance numbers by guest performers like Faith Cuneta, Juquin and the Whiplash, and previous "loveliest" winners Bianca Valerio, Maricris Sarino, Cristal Bagatsing and Pamela Ayson, who also shared the hosting chores.

Bravo to fashion director Jackie Aquino who beautifully directed this year's Loveliest Night of the Year, palanggas.

Auction

But the real fun part was when a previous "Loveliest," exotic beauty Raya Mananquil, modeled for the exciting auction the specially designed heart-shaped pendant in white gold and 4.60 pave-set diamonds that measured 3.4 x 3.2 cm valued at 15,000 euros (P945,000), an exquisite jewelry of Roberto Coin. Well, the lucky gal who got it was Christina Pappas, daughter of Love 14 Foundation incumbent president Nati Arranz and the late Greek shipping magnate George Pappas.

Raya earlier modeled eye-catching eyewear products of Tag Heuer, no less, that were also auctioned off during the event.

As the presentation reached the glamorous summit of the evening, the parents of the Loveliest and everyone who had been involved in this major cause and extended their support and generosity got tons of appreciation and almost unending applause.

True gems

As chair, the elegant and stylish Nini Licaros looked every bit the beauty queen she was in a slinky silk gown designed for her and her alone. Well, dahlings, Nini was definitely a show-stopper. She said in her speech, "All of you are true gems of inspiration. There can be no overemphasis on the help that you have provided to our foundation."

All the proceeds of this awesome gala event will go to the scholarship program of the foundation, palanggas.

Pinoy remains immature in sexual matters

THIS NEWS ITEM IN THE DEC. 23, 2005, issue of Philippine Daily Inquirer caught my attention: "Group sex among consenting adults is neither prostitution, nor a threat to society, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled on Wednesday as it lifted a ban on so-called 'swingers' club."

"In a ruling that changes the way Canadian courts determine what poses a threat to the population, the top court threw out the conviction of a Montreal man who ran a club where members could have group sex in a private room behind locked doors."

Out of curiosity, I sent the story to several Filipino women friends and asked whether they would now migrate to Canada. Replies ranged from, "I wouldn't even think of it," to "Let's go!"

A Philippine Airlines international flight attendant said she heard of a Canadian club called Free Will but a friend said it was very impersonal and mechanical. "Not my cup of tea," she said.

Attitude toward sex and what is acceptable sexual behavior differ from one culture to another. Such a ruling will not be issued here, especially with my Born-Again friend, Art Pangani-ban, as chief justice of the Supreme Court.

Taboo

In this highly conservative and outwardly religious country, anything connected to sex is taboo. Even movie titles and advertisements are given sexual interpretations. Remember the public outcry over a liquor company's ad, "Nakatikim ka na ba ng 15 años?"

I personally didn't consider it morally offensive, but apparently some people thought otherwise. Following the protests, including the slashing of a billboard by an overzealous former mayor, the company withdrew the ad.

This is why this country will never attain intellectual and emotional maturity in sexual matters. We will forever remain in the adolescent stage of sexual development—forever curious because we are never allowed to satisfy our natural, healthy and harmless inclinations.

INNER AWARENESS
Jaime T. Licaucó

The more society tries to suppress the healthy and normal expression of sexuality, the more pathological and neurotic a person's behavior becomes.

The average Filipino man or woman will get shocked at the sight of a bare-breasted woman on the street. But in Berkeley, California, for example, I saw two half-naked women walking casually without being arrested or causing scandal. In the world-famous beaches of Ipanema and Copacabana in Rio de Janeiro, as well as in the French Riviera and in Bali, Indonesia, women ca-vorted and played volleyball with only tiny pieces of cloth for covering. And nobody paid any special attention to them.

Normal

Because these people are used to such a sight, it is no longer a novelty or a curiosity. It has become part of the norm or culture.

Our conservative public officials and the more conservative religious authorities may be unwittingly stunting the Filipino's maturity regarding sex. Discouraging any attempt at sexual liberalization will ensure the public's being forever in the puerile stage of sexual development.

Our moral values are at best pathological or, worse, perverted, but no one seems to realize this, or talks about it. To illustrate, put a life-size poster or picture of two men brutally killing each other on a wall inside a mall. In another spot, put a life size poster or picture of a naked man and woman holding hands or kissing each other.

Which of these two posters do you think will receive the loudest protest and be considered immoral or offensive?

Only recently, in Davao City, a protest was raised against the display of a completely naked statue of the Roman god Apollo. It is the exact replica of a statue in Rome where the Vatican, the seat of Catholicism, is located. Isn't this a sign of a pathological mind? But here we call it good moral judgment.

I agree that a certain degree of censorship must be applied to protect those whose minds may not be ready to see delicate parts of the human anatomy without malice or prurient interest. But this certainly should not apply to the adult population.

I don't believe that allowing adults to see naked men and women in movies and magazines will increase crimes against morality and against women, the most common argument advanced by religious and other ultra conservative groups. No serious, incontestable study has ever been conducted to prove this.

The current ban on the display of nipples and pubic hair in movies and publications has not helped reduce crimes against women. Too many women and minors are being raped and sexually molested, some even by Catholic priests. So what does this show us?

The more we suppress and censor natural and healthy expressions of sexuality, the more we arouse the public's curiosity. Once curiosity is satisfied, it is gone. A person who has had a full meal and is no longer hungry will not want to eat again.

Hopefully we will mature enough to regard the naked human body as a beautiful creation of God, and without malice.

The most intense ab exercises

IT'S A MYTH THAT ABDOMINAL exercises are all you need to have a flat abdomen. The exercises, by themselves, do not burn enough calories to make a significant reduction in abdominal fat. Studies have shown that you can't reduce the fat in a particular part of the body by only doing specific exercises for that area.

But abdominal exercises do help to make your tummy look smaller by acting like a tight girdle to hold in your intestines, stomach, and other internal organs. Strong ab muscles also help to prevent lower back injury.

In 2001, the American Council on Exercise, aka the "workout watchdog," asked Dr. Peter Francis of the San Diego University to rate 13 abdominal exercises to find out which exercise worked the abdominal muscles the most.

Four muscles form a multilayered multidirectional girdle around the trunk. The most obvious to the naked eye, the rectus abdominis or the "six-pack" muscle, runs vertically down the middle of your abdomen. The external and internal obliques crisscross the waist in opposing diagonal fibers. And the deepest muscle, the transversus abdominis, wraps around the middle of the torso like a big wide belt.

Comparison

Francis measured the activity of the rectus and external obliques. The traditional crunch or half sit-up was used as the standard for comparison.

Four of the exercises used abdominal equipment—captain's chair (also called a "high chair" or "Roman chair"), stability ball, Torso Track, and Ab-Rocker.

The captain's chair is a gym machine that lets the user "hang" off the ground by resting on the forearms while lifting the legs. It was found to be 212 percent more intense for the rectus than a crunch and 310 percent more intense for the obliques.

Crunches done on a stability ball were 139 percent more intense for the rectus and 147 percent more intense for the obliques.

The Torso Track (a device that you use while on your knees as you roll forward on your hands) was just slightly more intense than a regular crunch. The least intense was the Ab-Rocker (a chair-like machine), which had a sort of negative rating because it had only 21 percent of the intensity you normally got from a traditional crunch.

WELL AND GOOD

Tina Juan

Put another way, it was 79 percent less intense than a crunch. In fact, it was the least intense of all the 13 exercises evaluated.

Most intense

The big winner was exercise done without equipment. It was 248 percent more intense for the rectus than a crunch and 290 percent more intense for the obliques. Francis called it the "bicycle maneuver." Pilates fans know it as the "single leg stretch." To do the exercise, you lie on your back, raise your knees over your hips, tighten your abs and then straighten one leg at a time at a 45-degree angle while you diagonally twist your upper body.

Other top winners were the "vertical leg crunch" and the "reverse crunch." For a complete description of all the 13 exercises in the study, go to the ACE website (www.acefitness.org).

The most intense exercises all involved using the abdominals as a stabilizing force to hold the trunk steady while the lower body did the movement. It makes sense that these types of exercises would be more intense than other kinds of crunches (even one done with both arms straight overhead) because the lower body weighs more than the upper body.

The exception in the "winner's circle" was the stability ball, which was the third most intense exercise of the 13 exercises rated (first was the bicycle, second was the captain's chair, fourth was the vertical leg crunch, fifth was the reverse crunch). The reason is the ball is an unstable surface. It keeps moving underneath you. This makes the abdominal muscles contract hard just to keep you from falling off the ball.

Benchmark

Use this information wisely. This doesn't mean that the traditional crunch is not worth anything in strengthening your abs. It is just used as the benchmark or the standard against which to compare the intensity of the other exercises.

Remember the principle of specificity of training, which states that you only get good at what you train for. If you have been used to doing the "bicycle maneuver," you will probably find doing a crunch on a stability ball a "belly shaking" experience even though the latter is a less intense exercise.

If you are not used to doing abdominal exercises, the bicycle maneuver is not exactly the place to start, especially if your lower back is also weak. Your abs will not be strong enough to hold the lower back in place because of the weight of the legs.

Beginners can do these types of exercises but they need special instructions to modify them (like bicycling at 90 degrees directly on top of the hips) for their fitness level.

Advanced exercisers have many more challenging choices. It just so happened that these were the 13 exercises chosen for evaluation.

EXERCISE OF THE WEEK

Pilates side leg lift series 3

This Pilates-inspired exercise strengthens the obliques (muscles that crisscross the waist), as well as the hips and inner thigh muscles.

Equipment

Exercise mat

Exercise technique

1. Lie on your side with your legs together and in line with your hips and shoulders.
2. Rest your head on your straight bottom arm and place your other hand on top of your hip.
3. Exhale as you lift both your legs and upper body (slide your hand down your leg). Inhale as you bring them down.

Performance tips

1. Always contract your abdominal muscles first before you lift your torso and legs to protect your lower back.

2. Point your feet as you lift the legs. Flex your feet as you lower them down.
3. Avoid jerking. Move slowly with control as you lift and lower.
4. Keep your shoulder and hip from rolling forward or backward by contracting your abdominal muscles and visualizing a glass of water on your shoulder and hip.
5. Lengthen and elongate by stretching your upper body and legs in opposite directions.
6. Try to keep your neck and head parallel to the floor when lifting. Try to keep knees and ankles together.
7. This is an advanced exercise. Do not attempt this if you have a history of lower back problems. Ask your doctor first.

Repetitions

Do five to 10 repetitions on each side.

The art of peaceful thinking

choice. I can choose to accept it or not accept it. What we learn in this practice is really not to accept it in the first place... If someone disrespects you, give them respect back. It's the most disarming thing. They wouldn't know what to do. I tell you, human beings, whether they're the President, need love and respect. When we give it to them, they soften and they'll be open to whatever you want to communicate to them."

And it's not just those who deem themselves as the villains of your life but also the people you love who make an impact on your state of mind. Hogg says, "We want loving relationships but we're so fragile and delicate that we keep taking sorrow from the people we love. So one day we love, the next day we're so furious with them. We get hurt and offended. Those relationships are based on ego rather than real understanding. We've become so delicate now that just a thought, a facial expression, just the presence of people sometimes affects us."

Hogg says the key is "detached involvement" or taking the dependence out of the relationship.

"When you begin to practice meditation, you appreciate people. You interact with people but you will realize that all the richness in life is internal. So you're not really dependent on people loving you, supporting you, respecting you. If they do, it's nice. If they don't, it's also nice. You're still involved, you're still connected. But when you take away dependence, you take away a lot of the negativity. There's less control and manipulation."

Hogg says that the less influenced you are by people, the more you can help them. "Even when a mother has a desperately sick child, a nurse is better to look after the child because the nurse is loving but the nurse is not so caught up in the worry. It's a blessing in life when you don't feel so influenced and so sensitive."

Apart from establishing healthier relationships with one's self and with others, meditation offers a lot of other benefits for people who consistently practice it.

Mental and emotional benefits

"A majority of the benefits are mental and emotional. You begin to value yourself more, you don't feel like a victim of your state of mind, you sleep better, and so on.

People who meditate regularly have less hospital visits and doctor visits than other people. Your immune system is strengthened when you're happy, when you're peaceful and when you have loving feelings. You have resilience to illness."

Hogg enumerates signs that will tell you it's a good time to study meditation. "If you have highly fluctuating moods and a chronic lack of self value, if you're always putting yourself down; if you're feeling fearful and anxious about people and situations in your life, if your mind is in overdrive, if you can't sleep well, if you don't know how to stop."

Hogg says meditation is also a good way for people to explore their deeper purpose in life.

But how does meditation fit in a predominantly Catholic society like the Philippines where people might be afraid that the practice would clash with their religious beliefs?

Hogg believes there isn't any conflict. "I've taught Jesuit priests and nuns to meditate. It's a universal practice, really. It's just enhancing the quality of your relationship with God. In the contemporary world, unfortunately, there's a lot of conflict between religions. But I feel that true religion is to be respectful and tolerant of everyone, to give value to every belief. In our centers, there are Christians, Muslims, Hindus, Buddhists—they all come and they continue to practice their lifestyle but they also find that the method of meditation helps them connect with God... [Meditation] doesn't clash with religion, it's just surviving in the 21st century. And it's free, that's a fringe benefit."

Tips for a pain-free new year

Now that the holiday season is over, fatigue and stress caused by heavy traffic, long lines at shopping malls and late night parties might just be starting to take their toll on your muscles. These may well likely result in muscle pain.

Most muscle pain feels like an uncomfortable ache or stiffness and may also include swelling and redness. It is often related to tension, overuse, or muscle injury from exercise or physically-demanding work. Most muscle pain is temporary and minor and can be relieved by simple remedies:

- Rest the painful muscle
- Avoid high-impact aerobic activities and weight lifting when injured or while in pain.
- Be sure to get plenty of sleep and try to reduce stress.
- Yoga and meditation are excellent ways to help you sleep and relax.

In traditional Chinese medicine (TCM), according to John K. Chen, PhD, in an article in Acupuncture Today, "effective pain relief most often requires the use of herbs that activate qi and blood, removing stagnation and thus resolving the cause of pain."

"The fundamental etiology of pain is qi stagnation, blood stagnation, or both. It is often said that where there is pain, there is stagnation; where there is stagnation, there is pain," Dr. Chen said.

BSI Medicated Spray is a natural solution for muscle pain. It contains six herbal ingredients found to relieve pain, menthol and methyl salicylate. The pain-relieving herbs include nux vomica, believed to promote the flow of qi and blood in the collaterals, relieve pain and promote the subsidence of swelling; dryaria which is believed to help strengthen bones, promote the healing of fracture; pseudoginseng which comes from the dried root of Panax notoginseng helps eliminate blood stasis, arrest bleeding, decrease swelling; and Huperzia serrata (Lycopodium serratum) which helps treat inflammation and injury from fall or bumps.

BSI Medicated Spray comes in a handy and easy-to-use 64 mL plastic container, which is non-aerosol, therefore environment-friendly. It is also economical, with controlled release mechanism, and can be used for more than 450 times. There is no need to massage the area as the soothing relief of BSI Medicated Spray is felt right away.

BSI Medicated Spray is ideal for people who undergo strenuous physical activities (e.g. athletes, military personnel), those experiencing low back pain, wrist pain, neck pain, those with arthritis and rheumatism. It can also be used by people who just want to relax their muscles and get the feeling of a massage.

BSI Medicated Spray, a natural relief for tired and strained muscles, is distributed exclusively by New Smart Formulae Trading Corp. (Tel. no. 374-6182 • 374-6179) and available at Mercury Drug outlets.

When the interview was about to end, he yelled 'wait!' Then he said, 'I have something to say to you.' After a long litany of beautiful words, he popped the question and I said yes!"

Vince Hizon's proposal to sportscaster Patricia "Shaan" Bermudez was almost like an exhilarating, heart-pumping basketball game.

"Vince was going to play that day and I was assigned to do the courtside report," says Bermudez. "I heard something from the stadium speakers. I turned around and saw Vince with flowers and a microphone. He said, 'Will you make

"The way to health is a scented bath and an oil massage everyday."—Hippocrates, 5th century BC

ONE OF THE FUNDAMENTAL CONCEPTS FOR achieving balance is the pursuit of harmony within the body and with the environment.

There are regimens you can apply to everyday life, extracted and distilled from the best Asian ways to achieve balance. You need not hie off to a place as remote and exotic as a Himalayan spa to recharge and rejuvenate the body, mind and spirit. This can be achieved right here in the city or in the privacy of your own home or any accessible place of retreat and relaxation.

Instead of seeking treatment, focus on a natural way of being that will allow you to become stronger and healthier.

Be kind to yourself

Often, we are too hard on ourselves. In daily life, an office worker will stay on the job an extra hour just to finish the paperwork even if he/she is feeling hunger pangs. An executive will skip breakfast just to make it to that important meeting or burn up his/her inner reserves by overloading the day with back-to-back meetings with hardly time to catch his/her breath. Worst of all, a businessman will bring the office—and paperwork—to his house. Sounds familiar?

Begin by being kind to yourself.
1. Leave the office where it is. Don't take it home with you. The home is a place for relaxation. Keep it that way.
2. Listen to the call of nature. If you are hungry, eat. If you have an urgent need to rush to the toilet, by all means go. Do not postpone the important or the inevitable.

INSIDE OUT

Cory Quirino

3. In-between meetings, deliberations and negotiations, give yourself time for relaxation, enough to do this three-minute breathing exercise: Close your eyes. Sit back. Be comfortable. Recall your favorite music. Hear it in your head. Breathe slowly. Exhale gently. Shut out the world. "Listen" to the song till the end.
4. Have five sips of water to energize yourself.
5. Face the world with a smile.

Seek your balance

According to traditional Chinese medicine, everything in the universe consists of the yin and the yang.

Yin is feminine, cold, quiet, static, dark and wet while Yang is masculine, dynamic, bright, warm and dry. Without yin, there is no yang and vice versa. True health can only be achieved if they are in harmony within us.

This equilibrium can be destroyed or disrupted by many internal influences (emotional upheavals like sorrow, worry, grief, fear, shock and, yes, even extreme joy) and external forces (cold, fire, wind, dampness, heat, fire and dryness).

Being one

Considered by the scholars as the oldest healing practice in the world, Ayurveda (ayur=life, veda=knowledge) and its belief centers on being "one." The vibrations of creation produced five elements: space, water, fire, heat that were reduced to three forces—vata=air, pitta=fire, kapha=earth. It is the balance of these doshas that rules one's constitution.

What dosha type are you? Vata=artistic, nervous/high-strung; pitta=aggressive, hot-tempered, driven; kapha=loving, affectionate, caring but prone to weight gain. All individuals possess these characteristics but one dosha will be dominant.

Healing oil treatment

Vata—calming oils: almond, castor, olive, sesame, wheat germ;

Pitta—cooling oils: coconut, almond, sunflower, sandalwood;

Kapha—invigorating oils: canola, corn, mustard

Warm without overheating your chosen oil. Rub onto your body from head to toe for 15 minutes. Take a hot shower. Feel relaxed and be still for a few minutes.

Note: Dosha preparations are available at Body Shop.

Yoghurt rub

Get 2-3 cups of plain yoghurt. Coat your body from head to foot. Leave on for 10 minutes. Get a towellette and rub your body briskly. Rinse in cool water.

No treatment, no matter how simple or sophisticated, can help you feel better if your mind is not at peace. So, open your mind and allow the healing forces of nature to give you your much desired balance.

Love and light!

MEDICard, The Healthcare I Deserve!

What health benefits can be derived from virgin coconut oil (VCO)?

Take Charge Doc!

Virgin coconut oil (VCO) has unique properties because it contains the most concentrated natural source of medium chain fatty acids (63%). These MCFAs or medium-chain fatty acids enter the body directly into the portal veins, are processed directly in the liver and immediately converted into energy, and are not deposited as fat. Therefore, less strain to the liver, pancreas and digestive system. It is useful for critically-ill patients and those with problems with fat digestion, including premature babies. And because of its thermogenic properties it raises the metabolic rate of the body, prevents accumulation of fats and can even cause weight loss. Medium-chain fatty acids are usually added into sports drinks and energy bars to provide a quick source of energy.

Contrary to the notion that all saturated fats aggravate coronary heart disease, with its MCFA content it does not raise cholesterol levels in the blood but maintains or increases HDL (good cholesterol) in the blood. Moreover, the lauric acid found in VCO has antimicrobial properties and can kill in vitro lipid-coated viruses, bacteria, fungi and protozoa, including tuberculosis mycobacteria, human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), and helicobacter pylori (peptic ulcer).

Do-it-yourself 'long and loose' look for your hair

HERE'S GOOD NEWS FOR THE MODERN, FASHIONABLE Asian woman who wants to achieve the "long and loose" hair look but doesn't want to spend hours working at it.

Andy Uffels, Pantene Pro-V's global artistic director, says the "in" hair look may be recreated easily and quickly on your own.

Wash and condition hair with Pantene Smooth and Silky Shampoo and Conditioner. Blow dry your hair with a flat brush, drying it from scalp to ends for a really smooth appearance and add body by drying in different directions.

Blow any hair from the face and brush it lightly before leaving it to hang naturally.

For that special night-out, play with your hair and style it differently.

After washing your hair with Pantene Smooth and Silky Shampoo and Conditioner, further pamper it with a special treat. Using Pantene's Intensive Rinse-Off Conditioner will provide hair with extra conditioning to work on the hair shaft to make it well moisturized, smooth, shiny and strong.

Blow-dry hair with a roller brush until it is ultra sleek and flat to get rid of any frizziness or flyaway ends.

Draw back into a full-bodied chignon or high ponytail, and, again, smooth away any flyaway hair from around the face and ears.

IZA CALZADO, Pantene model, shows off her beautiful long hair.
